The agreement also provided for an investigation of the governance of the Oglalas' Pine Ridge Reservation here, including an independent audit of the Oglala tribal council's finances.

But it included no amnesty for the leaders of the insurgents and others in the village—some 50 in all—who face federal charges in connection with the rebellion.

The settlement was termed "a small victory, a preliminary victory, in our war with the United States over treaty rights," by Russell Means, a leader of the American Indian Movement, and one of the leaders of the Wounded Knee occupation.

"I don't think any great victory has been won by anyone," said Assistant Attorney General Kent Frizzell, the chief government negotiator. "What we have learned, hopefully, is that all of us in the past at times have failed to live up to our agreements."

Inside the tepee, just before the signing, Mr. Frizzell and the Indian leaders smoked the peace pipe. Sioux medicine men prayed for success in carrying out the agreement, and Mr. Frizzell, sitting cross-legged on the ground, told the Indians that "I pray to my father in heaven as you do to your great spirit, that the agreement we are about to sign is not full of empty words," and that "the promises will be fulfilled."

For nearly six weeks—much of that time filled with gunfire—

Thuy Says U.S. Stalls On Accord

Charges Delays On Mines and Aid

By Flora Lewis

PARIS, April 6 (NYT).—Xuan Thuy, who was North Vietnam's representative in Paris for more than four years of formal and secret Vietnam talks, said last night that the United States was "trying to stall" on applying provisions of the cease-fire agreement.

In response to questions, Mr. Thuy made these points to enlarge upon his charge:

● The United States has removed only three mines from North Vietnamese waters in two months, after the accords required immediate and full removal of what Mr. Thuy said were "tens of thousands of mines" planted.

● The United States has conducted reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam "from time to time."

The cease-fire agreement signed here Jan. 27 banned "all military activities." There have been conflicting reports since then on whether still-secret "interpretations" of the text—acknowledged by President Nixon's adviser, Henry A. Kissinger—prohibit or permit unarmed reconnaissance.

Kissinger Himself

Asked about these interpretations and whether they exempted the flight of unarmed photographic planes, as some American sources have said, Mr. Thuy said: "No. If Kissinger listens to the tape, he would hear that it is he himself who said that the ban on military activities includes unarmed reconnaissance."

It was the first official indication that in addition to notes taken by aides on both sides, the secret talks between Mr. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho, of the North Vietnamese Politburo, leading to the Vietnam cease-fire agreement had been tape-recorded.

On economic aid, Mr. Thuy said the United States was talking only in generalities, so far, and refused to go into details. He said, "we have the impression the United States is trying to stall on demining and economic talks."

Asked what North Vietnam was seeking, he again avoided details, saying that Hanoi wanted U. S. contributions at the level "of the destruction caused by United States forces."

The interview took place in a small room off the reception halls of the Hotel Lutetia, on the Left Bank, where Mr. Thuy was giving a farewell cocktail party before returning to North Vietnam.

In the interview, Mr. Thuy said that Hanoi sought a "durable peace in Vietnam and Southeast Asia and favorable new relations with the United States."

No U.S. Comment

WASHINGTON, April 6 (NYT).—State and Defense Department spokesmen said there would be no immediate comment on the statements by Mr. Thuy.

Defense officials also said they had no knowledge of any reconnaissance flight by U.S. planes over North Vietnam.

The Defense Department reported last week that only one mine had been destroyed in the mine-clearing operations off Haiphong. The explanation offered by defense officials was that most of the mines laid by the United States had become deactivated.

U.S. Planes Try To Break Threat At Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH, April 6 (AP).—American B-52s bombed Communist troop concentrations in the outskirts of this city today in an attempt to break the Reds' hold on major highways and waterways and to head off a possible assault on the city itself, military sources reported.

Fuel supplies already are running low in Phnom Penh and a convoy of South Vietnamese cargo and fuel ships was reported prepared to make a dash up the Mekong River to the capital tomorrow morning.

Ambushes from river banks by Communist Vietnamese and Khmer Rouge forces have kept the supplies of oil and cargo from reaching Phnom Penh by water. The main highway to the chief seaport of Kompong Som, south of Phnom Penh, has been cut by Communist attacks. The B-52s, flying from Thailand, attacked near the suburban town of Takhmau, 14 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, last night and today. Informants said the targets were about 2,000 Communist troops believed concentrated in the area.

Khmer Rouge forces in that sector have closed off a 30-mile segment of Highway 1 between Phnom Penh and the Neak Luong ferry crossing for more than two weeks. Highway 1 links Phnom Penh with Saigon.

Little Ground Gained

Heavy U.S. air attacks were reported in that area too, but Cambodian troops have been able to regain only a few hundred yards a day.

Military sources say the B-52s are flying as many as 130 sorties a day along the Highway 1 area. A sortie is one mission by one plane.

A large force is reported concentrated west of Phnom Penh and apparently is preparing for a strike at the capital, informants said. They expressed belief, however, attacks would not come for another two weeks or so and would be aimed at the Pochentong Airport in the suburbs, the radio-television station and a bridge that links the city with Highway 1.

The informants said a secondary objective may be to stir panic, confusion and fear among Phnom Penh's population.

There was speculation that the enemy would permit a large oil-cargo convoy to reach Phnom Penh from South Vietnam because the fuel shortages in the country also were affecting their military operations against President Lon Nol's government.

The idea, sources said, is to permit distribution of the fuel supplies and then plunder them.

In another Indochina development, the Viet Cong claimed that Saigon reports of stepped-up Communist attacks in South Vietnam, allegedly in preparation for a full-scale offensive, were a smokescreen for the government's own land-grabbing operations.

No Offensive Planned

"The Provisional Revolutionary Government is planning no offensive of any kind," declared a spokesman in Saigon for the Viet Cong delegation to the Joint Military Commission charged with supervising the cease-fire.

The spokesman catalogued a series of regimental-size operations he alleged South Vietnamese forces have launched in the last week against Communist-held areas throughout much of the country.

The Saigon command, meanwhile, reported that Communist forces were maintaining their assaults in all four military regions of South Vietnam.

The chief military spokesman, Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, claimed that North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops stepped up attacks on the Tong Le Chan ranger base, 50 miles north of Saigon, and on defense positions west of the old imperial capital of Hué.

Some of the sharpest fighting was reported in the north, where Communist artillery pounded defensive positions west of Hué with a day-long barrage of 680 rounds. A subsequent infantry assault was beaten off, Col. Hien reported.

Tong Le Chan was hit by another 250 artillery and mortar shells, he said.

Around Cai Lay, in the northern Mekong Delta, which has been the scene of sharp fighting for two days, Communist mortars, wire-guided missiles and infantry assaults killed seven government soldiers and wounded 24, he said.

Russia Reported to Increase Central Europe Tank Force

By Drew Middleton

WASHINGTON, April 6 (NYT).—The Soviet Union has recently completed the movement of about 1,200 tanks into East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia, according to qualified sources in the Department of Defense.

The Soviet Union has approximately 8,700 tanks in its 16 armored and 15 mechanized infantry divisions in Central Europe. The total tank strength of the Warsaw Pact forces in that area and northern Europe is estimated at 17,300 tanks, or three times that of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces in Europe.

The Soviet reinforcement, which was said to be primarily in new T-62 main battle tanks, was reported completed in time for the augmented tank strength to be used as a counter in negotiations in Vienna on mutual and balanced force reductions.

Atlantic alliance sources said that a reduction in the Soviet advantage in armor is a prime object of the West in the talks.

The sources in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization condemned the Russian build-up as "needless," pointing out that the Warsaw Pact forces, before this reinforcement, already had far more tanks than could be considered necessary for the defense of Eastern Europe.

There are reports in NATO circles in Europe that the Soviet Union is moving two infantry divisions from Russia to Central Europe.

This reinforcement, which could not be confirmed in the Defense Department, would raise the number of Soviet divisions in the area to 33, the highest figure in eight years. The Soviet delegation at Vienna thus would begin substantive negotiations on force reductions from a higher force level than that of Jan. 31, when procedural talks began.

Representatives of the United States, speaking for NATO, and the Soviet Union for the Warsaw Pact, have been discussing what are called procedural issues since that date.

A curious development of the Vienna talks has been strong hints by Soviet diplomats that Moscow is not seeking a complete withdrawal of U.S. forces from Europe. Some 305,000 U.S. soldiers, sailors and airmen are in Europe and aboard the ships of the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean Sea.

The reasons for this Soviet position, according to Americans who have studied the exchanges, is that the Soviet government fears that complete U.S. withdrawal would accelerate the political development of the European Common Market and would also lead to an increase in West Germany's armed forces, already the largest in Western Europe.

Swedes Vote Law Against Terrorists

STOCKHOLM, April 6 (AP).—The Swedish parliament today adopted, by a 254-to-22 vote, a law that will allow security authorities to dismiss or expel "potential foreign terrorists," monitor their telephones, make house searches and open letters addressed to foreign citizens suspected of being members or sympathizers of "terrorist groups."

Carl Lidbo, minister without portfolio and main author of the law, referred to the Croatian Ustashi and the Palestinian Black September groups as the main targets of the legislation, the first in Sweden directed exclusively against foreigners.

While the proposed law was heatedly debated in parliament representatives of various political organizations rallied outside to protest "this assault on the already undermined rights of foreigners in Sweden."

EEC Approves Sale of Butter To Russia at a $362-Million Loss

BRUSSELS, April 6 (AP).—The European Economic Community's Executive Commission today approved the sale of 200,000 metric tons of butter from EEC stockpiles to the Soviet Union at $420 a ton, FOB, EEC sources said.

The price is about half the world price for butter and less than one-fifth the $2,282 a ton intervention price that the EEC's farm fund paid to purchase the butter from farmers as part of its price support operations.

The sale to the Soviet Union thus will cost the farm fund about $362 million. The sale has been heavily criticized after first word of the plan, proposed by France, became known.

But EEC officials believe that this step is useful in order to reduce the EEC's 400,000-ton stockpile.

Market sources said getting the butter out of cold storage meant a saving of $1,550 per ton per year.

Critics assert the cost of the sale is too high and some suggest butter should cost less within the EEC.

St. Louis Flood Crest Is Short Of Forecast; Danger Persists

ST. LOUIS, April 6 (AP).—The floodwaters of the Mississippi River have hit an early and lower-than-predicted crest at St. Louis and officials said today that it appears the worst of the flooding may be past.

But a Weather Service spokesman said:

"We're still sitting on a powder keg. The best hope is for only light rains. If we could get a week of no rain, we would be in good shape."

"This isn't the end of the flood," he said. "It's still up there and is above flood stage. We won't get back to normal until the water gets back in the channel. You must also remember that we are in April and rain can be expected."

The National Weather Service said that the river had crested at 39.84 feet and dropped slightly by midmorning today.

Forecast Revised

The service had forecast a crest today of 40.5 feet, which would have been the highest level here since 1844. The forecast was revised yesterday to 40.3 feet, which still would have been a modern record.

U.S. engineers said that the lower crest would "not have any great immediate effect" on their damage estimate of $4 million for the area from Hannibal, Mo., to Cairo, Ill.

"This now means keeping a careful watch on trouble spots. . . We'll have to keep all pumps in operation. There will be no more evacuations unless things give way," a spokesman said.

The engineer corps said that more than 1.2 million acres of land were under water from Hannibal to Cairo and nearly 4,000 persons have been forced to leave their homes. The death toll across southern Illinois and eastern Missouri stood at five.

The Weather Service spokesman said that earlier in the week levee breaks north of St. Louis and along the Missouri River caused the floodwaters to spread out over farmland before reaching St. Louis.

The Missouri River crested at St. Charles today at 34.8 feet, also below the predicted level.

Nixon Orders 'All-Out' Push For Pipeline

By Carroll Kilpatrick

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif., April 6 (WP).—President Nixon has ordered Secretary of the Interior Rogers C.B. Morton to go "all out" in working with Congress and federal agencies to clear the way for construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline.

Mr. Morton said after a 45-minute meeting with the President yesterday that every effort would be made to get legislation through Congress this summer authorizing him to grant the necessary rights-of-way for pipeline construction from the North Slope of Alaska to Valdez, a port 790 miles to the south.

At the same time, Mr. Morton expressed strong administration opposition to a proposal by some members of Congress for the construction of a trans-Canada pipeline that would deliver oil to the Midwest.

Energy Shortage

The trans-Alaska line is "vital to the national interest," Mr. Morton quoted the President as having said, particularly in view of the energy shortage and the

Iraqi Slain in Paris Street, Said to Be Palestine Leader

PARIS, April 6 (IHT).—An Iraqi law professor, described in Beirut as a leader of an extremist Palestinian guerrilla group, was assassinated in the center of Paris early today, the police said.

They quoted a witness as saying two men walked up to Basil Raoud al-Kubaisi, 39, and fired eight bullets into him at point-blank range with pistols equipped with silencers.

"The shots . . . were like champagne corks popping, but not so loud," the witness said.

Mr. al-Kubaisi's killing was the third in Paris in less than six months that police suspect is part of a Middle East underground war involving Palestinian guerrillas and Israeli counter-agents.

Officials of the Iraqi Embassy here charged it was "a terrorist act by Israeli secret agents." They said Mr. al-Kubaisi had no political activities and no personal or political enemies.

Mr. al-Kubaisi was shot by two men on a street corner near his hotel in the Madeleine district and died on the spot.

The Iraqi sources described him as "a revolutionary avant-garde intellectual known for his anti-Zionist positions." He was the author of a number of studies of the Palestinian guerrilla movement, and had taught at the American University in Beirut.

Described as Leader

A statement issued in Beirut by the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine asserted that the dead man was shot "while carrying out a mission in Paris" for the Front, and charged that "imperialist intelligence and Zionism" were responsible. It described the victim as one of the Front's commanding members.

The Beirut statement also addressed a warning to France.

"The French authorities' continued ignoring of the activities of Israeli intelligence and its gangs on French soil makes these authorities largely responsible for the crimes committed."

There has been rising concern in France over the increased incidents of violence or attempted violence apparently stemming from the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Because of its sympathy for the Arabs, France has been considered off-limits to guerrilla activities, but last month two Arabs were arrested with explosives in their car and two suspected Black September terrorists were deported.

Last November, a self-styled Syrian journalist, Khodr Kannoum, was gunned down outside his luxury apartment. French newspapers said he was a suspected double-agent for Israel.

Soon after, the Palestine Liberation Organization chief in Paris, Mahmoud Hamchari, was killed by a bomb blast. Arab leaders blamed Israeli agents.

Koruturk, 70, Chosen on 15th Ballot

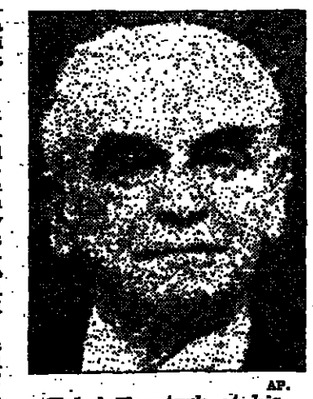

Turkey Elects Ex-Admiral to Presidency

ANKARA, April 6 (UPI).—Parliament today elected a former naval commander, Fahri Koruturk, as the sixth president of Turkey, ending a crisis of almost a month.

The 70-year-old retired admiral, who has served as ambassador to the Soviet Union and to Spain, took the oath of office to stormy applause from both houses of parliament. "I am confident I shall overcome every difficulty in performing my duties as president with the cooperation of all my nation and the institutions of the state," Mr. Koruturk said in his inaugural address.

The seven-year term of Cevdet Sunay expired on March 28, and Senate speaker Tekin Arburn of the Justice party had been acting president. Mr. Koruturk was elected on the 15th ballot since both houses of parliament began the voting on March 13.

Mr. Koruturk polled 365 votes from both houses of parliament, 47 more than the simple majority of 318 needed for election. Gen. Faruk Gurler, the military-backed candidate who had withdrawn from the balloting after it was obvious he would not poll a majority, received 87 votes. Ferruh Bozbeyli, the leader of the Democratic party, got 51 votes and a former president, 88-year-old Ismet Inonu, got 17 votes.

AP.

Fahri Koruturk at his inauguration Friday.

Premier Ferit Melen announced that the government would resign, and political sources said Mr. Melen was expected to step down by Sunday to allow the president to designate a new cabinet.

Leaders of Turkey's two largest political parties and the military agreed on Mr. Koruturk as a compromise candidate this morning. Parliament assembled for the ballot just 4 hours and 10 minutes after the agreement was reached.

Suleyman Demirel, leader of the majority Justice party, and Bulent Ecevit, chairman of the Republican People's party, agreed on the retired admiral as the compromise candidate at a 10-minute meeting this morning following days of consultation.

Mr. Koruturk also was backed by the military. Of Turkey's five previous presidents, only Celal Bayar was not a former general.

Paris Denies Pompidou Will Visit U.S. in Spring

PARIS, April 6 (IHT).—Reports that President Georges Pompidou will visit the United States this spring to confer with President Nixon were called "completely groundless" by official sources here today.

They said that France still expected Mr. Nixon to make an official visit to Europe, but probably not before fall. The U.S. President had been planning a spring visit to Europe, but the plans were dropped in the wake of the strong European criticism of the renewed U.S. bombing of North Vietnam in mid-December.

Meets Leaders of Congress

Thieu, in Washington, Holds Series of Economic Aid Talks

From Wire Dispatches

WASHINGTON, April 6.—South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu continued a series of meetings today on postwar aid for his country.

He also planned to see Deputy Secretary of State Kenneth Rush, and Defense Secretary Elliot L. Richardson.

Yesterday, as he marked his 50th birthday, Mr. Thieu went to Capitol Hill for meetings with the leadership of both houses of Congress.

The Saigon leader also had a private meeting with Vice-President Agnew, his official host here while Mr. Nixon remained in San Clemente, and he presented awards at the Vietnamese Embassy to American officials, including Gen. Alexander M. Haig jr., Deputy Army Chief of Staff, who handled the sensitive negotiations with Mr. Thieu on the peace settlement.

Some of Mr. Thieu's most outspoken critics in the past have been on Capitol Hill, but his charm seemed to work with Congress.

He met for an hour with about 25 House leaders and, according to Rep. Wayne L. Hays, D., Ohio, he was "most forthright" in answering questions. Speaker Carl Albert, D., Okla., said Mr. Thieu was "a very able man, soft-spoken, but obviously with a lot of steel in him."

Mr. Thieu then met privately for a half-hour with Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D., Mont., and Minority Leader Hugh Scott, R., Pa., and then went to a reception attended by about 60 senators.

Mr. Thieu conferred today with Pierre-Paul Schweitzer, managing director of the International Monetary Fund.

Sources said the 90-minute meeting with the IMF chief and a talk which Mr. Thieu had yesterday with World Bank president Robert S. McNamara were part of an effort to shift some of the burden of South Vietnam's postwar development from the United States to the world community.

Red 'Hypnosis' Of Asia Seen Broken by War

WASHINGTON, April 6 (AP).—Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew said today that the American intervention in Vietnam broke a hypnotic spell that had led other Southeast Asian countries to believe that Communism is the irresistible wave of history.

He said few would have predicted that when American involvement ended in an orderly manner the government of President Nguyen Van Thieu would still control the principal towns and most populated areas of South Vietnam.

"There was no Vietnam victory," he added in an address at the National Press Club. "Hanoi will be quiet for a while, unless massive military and economic aid is again pumped in by the Soviet Union and China."

Mr. Lee, who is here for talks with President Nixon next week, urged that the United States retain a presence in Asia. He contended that great-power competition for influence over third countries is part of the "game of peaceful coexistence."

Hanoi Tells Sen. Brooke Not to Visit

By Malcolm W. Browne

VIENTIANE, Laos, April 6 (NYT).—Sen. Edward Brooke, R., Mass., who had hoped to make an on-the-spot assessment of North Vietnam's postwar reconstruction needs, was told by Hanoi today that he could not visit North Vietnam for the time being.

Sen. Brooke, the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said tonight that the North Vietnamese had informed him their leaders were "too busy at this time" to receive him in Hanoi and would remain too busy for the indefinite future.

A North Vietnamese spokesman here indicated that there were misgivings in Hanoi about Sen. Brooke because he is a member of President Nixon's party and subscribed to many of the President's policies.

Sen. Brooke said he was disappointed by Hanoi's rejection of his request for a visa, and that he was concerned that the action would have an adverse effect on his Senate colleagues in their consideration of future aid to Indochina in general and North Vietnam in particular.

Sen. Brooke said his rejection by Hanoi had not changed his support of the basic principles that nondiscriminatory assistance to all the nations of Indochina would help assure the future peace of the area.

He said that two days ago, while he was in Cambodia, he received word that the U.S. State Department had no objection to his proposed visit to Hanoi. Earlier, he had been discouraged by the State Department from making the trip, on the grounds that North Vietnam was still violating the cease-fire and because Hanoi had delayed return of the last American prisoners of war.

Meeting With Red

However, Mr. Brooke was received here today by a representative of the Communist-led Pathet Lao. The Senator said he had spent more than an hour with Soth Phetrasy, permanent leader of the Pathet Lao delegation in Vientiane.

Sen. Brooke said Mr. Soth had assured him that he would inform the Pathet Lao Central Committee of the U.S. desire for an accounting of all the Americans missing in action in Laos. The senator reported that Mr. Soth had assured him that the Pathet Lao holds no more American prisoners.

Medvedev Fails To Get Right to Leave London

LONDON, April 6 (Reuters).—Soviet authorities have refused to allow Dr. Zhores A. Medvedev, a leading Soviet scientist and dissident now working in London, to make lecture visits to France and the United States, it was learned today.

Dr. Medvedev, 47, a geneticist who specializes in aspects of aging confirmed that the Soviet Embassy in London had refused to allow him to leave the country. He described the ban as "unfortunate."

He had been invited to lecture at a French institute in Paris on April 26 and at the University of Paris the next day. He had also been invited to take part, with expenses paid, in an international congress on genetics due to be held at the University of California at Berkeley from Aug. 20 to 29.

Dr. Medvedev arrived here in mid-January to spend a year working at Britain's National Institute for Medical Research. Almost three years ago, he was the subject of a major protest action by Soviet intellectuals after he had been certified as a schizophrenic and forcibly detained for a month in a mental hospital.

Customs Walkout In Italy Ended After Nine Days

MILAN, April 6 (AP).—Italian customs inspectors were back at work today after a nine-day stoppage that stranded trucks, trains, ships and airborne cargoes and caused damage and disruption to the national economy.

The strike was scheduled to last 12 days through Sunday, but customs officials said an understanding had been reached with the government.

Inspectors had started the unrest in protest over an agreement between unions and the government depriving them of some privileges. They had threatened to stage another long strike next week.

Their stoppage caused damage put at several million dollars daily to the Italian economy. Work at many Italian firms was disrupted by shortages of raw material.

Siege at Wounded Knee Ends; Peace Pipe Smoked in Tepee

the insurgents had held the tiny collection of white frame buildings near Wounded Knee Creek where, on Dec. 29, 1890, the final clash of the centuries-old wars between whites and Indians occurred. In that encounter, some 200 Sioux men, women and children were killed, along with 31 soldiers.

Reforms Sought

The latter-day occupiers of Wounded Knee, principally members and supporters of the militant AIM, had vowed to remain until the government agreed to reassess the status of Indian treaties and carry out certain reforms on the Dakota reservation.

So far as is known, the 1973 siege of Wounded Knee produced five casualties—the most serious being the shooting in the chest on March 26 of Lloyd Grimm, the chief U.S. marshal for Nebraska. Mr. Grimm was paralyzed from the waist down. In addition, a medic inside the village was shot in the side, an FBI agent in the wrist, an Indian insurgent in the leg and another in the hand.

The affair began against a background of violence and controversy. Last Jan. 21, a young Oglala Sioux named Wesley Bad Heart Bull was stabbed to death in the nearby town of Buffalo Gap.

'Day of Indian Rights'

A few days later, Dennis J. Banks, a Chippewa who is national field director of the American Indian Movement, declared Feb. 6 a "national day of Indian rights." He urged all Indians to converge that day on Custer, S.D., where the accused killer of Mr. Bad Heart Bull, a white man, was to have a preliminary hearing.

Many did, and Feb. 6 and ensuing days were days of rioting in Custer and some other area towns.

At about that time, dissidents here were attempting to impeach Richard Wilson, president of the Sioux Tribal Council at the Oglalas' Pine Ridge reservation, where Wounded Knee is situated. Mr. Wilson's enemies charged him with misgovernment and misuse of funds. The impeachment attempt failed by a 14-to-0 vote of the council, which Mr. Wilson heads.

When the attempt failed, Mr. Wilson's opponents called on AIM for help. And shortly after 9 p.m. on Feb. 27, four days after the council's vote in support of Mr. Wilson, AIM and the anti-Wilson forces took over Wounded Knee.

Beirut Students, Police Fight Anew

BEIRUT, April 6 (UPI).—Demonstrating students skirmished with police in Beirut today for the second day in a row.

Witnesses said today's main action took place outside the American University of Beirut, which is surrounded by a 10-foot wall. Police fired tear gas grenades at the students and demonstrators hurled stones at police from the campus side of the wall.

Dr. Samuel Kirkwood, president of the American University, ordered the indefinite suspension of classes at the university.

At times, the students made sorties through a campus gate to throw stones at police.

The students are demanding reform of the educational system.

Rome Sleuth Shot 6 Times–Survives

ROME, April 6 (Reuters).—Hundreds of police using dogs and helicopters searched today for three men who gunned down a former top anti-Mafia investigator and his driver in what appeared to be an attempted Mafia "execution."

Police official Angelo Mangano, 53, was hit by six bullets in the head, throat, arms and right shoulder last night as he stepped out of his car outside his home, but he survived. Doctors said today he was out of danger.

His driver, Domenico Casella, was shot in the neck, throat and shoulder but managed to pick up Superintendent Mangano and drive him to a nearby clinic before himself collapsing. The driver's condition was reported to be serious.

Mr. Mangano was at one time deputy police chief of Nuoro in central Sardinia, an area notorious for bandits, but police sources said the theory of a Mafia attack was more likely. Mr. Mangano, himself a Sicilian, was for several years head of the Sicilian criminal police squad and involved in investigations into Mafia crimes.

Herbert Graf Dies in Geneva; Was Noted Opera Director

From Wire Dispatches

GENEVA, April 6.—Herbert Graf, director of the Grand Theatre here and stage director of the Metropolitan Opera from 1936 to 1960, died here last night after a long illness. He would have been 70 on Tuesday.

Mr. Graf's entire career was devoted to opera production, and he became known early as an innovator and was the author of a number of books expounding his ideas, especially on the production of opera in America.

He was born in Vienna, where his father, Max Graf, was a noted music critic. As a youth he decided what he wanted to do, and by the time he was 22 he was stage director of the opera in Munster. After working in several German theaters, he came to the United States in 1930, and stayed after Hitler came to power, becoming a U.S. citizen. For two years he worked with Fritz Reiner in the Philadelphia Orchestra's opera series, before going to the Met.

In 1960, he became director of the Zurich Opera, where a number of his leading singers were young Americans at the beginning of their careers—including tenor James McCracken and his wife, mezzo-soprano Sandra Warfield, sopranos Reri Grist and Virginia Gordoni, and baritone Robert Kerns. He left Zurich in 1962, and in 1965 became director in Geneva. In both cities he founded training schools connected with the theaters.

Mr. Graf also had a long association with the Salzburg Festival, dating back to the thirties, when he worked with Toscanini and other leading conductors. One of his most recent productions there, of Cavalieri's "Rappresentazione di Anima e di Corpo," has been one of the festival's hits for several seasons.

Mr. Graf suffered a bad fall last August while directing a television production. He is survived by his Swiss-born wife, the former Margrit Thuering.

Chester Conn

NEW YORK, April 6 (AP).—Songwriter Chester Conn, 76, whose popular works included "Night Lights" and "Forgive My Heart," died Wednesday of a heart ailment. A native of San Francisco, Mr. Conn founded the song publishing firm of Bregman, Vocco and Conn in 1938, publishing the songs of Johnny Mercer and Steve Allen.

Athens U. Closed, Senate Resigns

ATHENS, April 6 (Reuters).—Athens University was closed indefinitely today by its senate, which then resigned, admitting failure to satisfy student demands.

Yesterday, about 3,000 students gathered at the law faculty demanding the appointment of representatives from the university faculties to negotiate their problems with the senate.

Last month, the majority of university students returned to classes after a two-month strike to press for increased academic liberties and the right to participate in establishing school policies.

2,000 Strike 2 Hours In Protest at Renault

PARIS, April 6 (Reuters).—More than 2,000 workers at the main Renault motor plant here struck for two hours today in sympathy with 400 unskilled assembly line workers who downed tools 17 days ago. The company then laid off 7,000 other workers.

The workers held a protest meeting at their plant and one of the union leaders who called them out on strike said: "We are undergoing a severe crisis which could have serious results if the management does not listen to reason."

Meanwhile, the big Peugeot plant at St.-Etienne in central France was idle for the second day today, with 1,200 workers occupying the premises and demanding higher wages.

More Demonstrations In Barcelona Area

BARCELONA, April 6 (AP).—Demonstrations continued today in and around Barcelona for the third straight day to protest the killing of a worker in police-worker clashes at the nearby town of San Adrian de Besos.

An estimated 8,000 people marched through Cerdanyola chanting slogans about Tuesday's riots at San Adrian de Besos, where the worker, Manuel Fernandez Marquez, 27, was shot dead when 2,000 construction workers battled police following a wildcat strike in demand for better pay.

Dockers Vote By 2-1 to End London Strike

Longshoremen Set Return for Monday

LONDON, April 6 (UPI).—Six thousand London longshoremen voted today to return to work on Monday, ending a strike that has idled London's docks since last Monday.

The dockers met and voted by a margin of 2 to 1 to end the walkout. The strike, which tied up more than 30 ships, was called in protest against pay ceilings imposed by Prime Minister Edward Heath's government in Phase 2 of its inflation-fighting controls. The dockers, in retaliation, had insisted on work rules which meant more men would have had to work on each shift.

The cleaners, cooks and laundry workers in British hospitals were still striking against government wage controls.

Special Case

Leaders of the hospital union today asked the Trades Union Congress (TUC) to support their attempt to be treated as a special case under Phase 2 of the government's controls. The controls limit wage hikes to 4 percent of a basic salary and £1 a week.

The hospital workers asked the TUC to persuade other unions not to request the same special status if the hospital workers gain exemption on the ground of their low pay.

Victor Feather, the TUC general secretary, said afterward the TUC agreed. He said other unions would be asked not to cite a hospital settlement to justify their own claims.

Nixon Orders 'All-Out' Push For Pipeline

contribution it could make to reducing America's reliance on foreign oil.

Action by Congress is required in view of this week's refusal by the Supreme Court to overturn a ruling by the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia that federal law prevents Mr. Morton from granting a construction permit for public lands for rights-of-way of more than 54 feet in width.

Even if Congress grants Mr. Morton authority to issue permits for construction of the line, it will probably take a year of litigation to determine that the environmental impact would not violate requirements of the National Environmental Policy Act.

The government requested the Supreme Court to rule on both the permit width issue and the environmental issue, but the high court simply approved the Court of Appeals finding that law prevented rights-of-way of greater than 54 feet.

Mr. Morton said that in areas where the pipeline is underground the permit would not exceed 54 feet, but that where it is above ground it would have to be as much as several hundred feet.

Environmentalists say hot oil in the pipeline would melt the permafrost, preventing the orderly migration of animals, and would threaten the landscape if leaks occurred. They also fear oil spills in the ocean.

U.K. Convicts 4 On Ulster Arms

LONDON, April 6 (AP).—Four Northern Ireland Protestants, one of them a former Belfast city councilman, were sentenced to prison terms today for trying to buy illegal arms for Ulster guerrillas.

The four, believed to be supporters of the paramilitary Ulster Defense Association, were arrested in a London hotel last April as they negotiated for the weapons. Scotland Yard's Special Branch had infiltrated the plotters' ranks and said the four sought to buy submachine guns, rifles and pistols.

A judge in the Old Bailey Court sentenced Francis Quigley, 31, a onetime Belfast councilman, and John Moorehead, 47, a former member of Ulster's defunct "B Special" police auxiliary, to two years apiece. Another Belfast man was jailed for a year and a fourth was given a six-month suspended sentence.

Pistol Champ Loses in Duel With Burglar

RIO DE JANEIRO, April 6 (UPI).—Durval Guimaraes, 39, national pistol-shooting champion, lost a gun fight with a burglar this week.

South American as well as Brazilian titlist, Mr. Guimaraes returned home from target practice at the Fluminense Club to find a burglar in his home. Both Mr. Guimaraes and the invader fired. Mr. Guimaraes fell, wounded in the neck, and the burglar escaped, police said.

Mr. Guimaraes canceled a trip to Mexico, where he was to have participated in the South American Liberator's Cup target-shooting tournament.

Bomb Explodes in Nice

Pompidou May Cancel Exams If Student Unrest Goes On

PARIS, April 6 (AP).—President Georges Pompidou, approving measures to halt widespread student agitation, including a bomb explosion in Nice early today, said final exams would be called off where conditions do not permit classes to continue normally.

The statement meant students could face losing a whole school year or missing out on diplomas if the demonstrations, street battles and strikes continue. The unrest is in protest against a change in the conscription law which makes them liable for compulsory military service at 20 and a new system which can force some students to take an early and devalued diploma from their university studies.

"The time has come," said Education Minister Joseph Fontanet, "when we must put an end to politics in lycées and the universities."

Mr. Fontanet made his statement at the first meeting of the government, which was formed yesterday. Mr. Fontanet said the government must act "firmly."

Fontanet Decision Backed

The cabinet approved Mr. Fontanet's decision not to tolerate the occupation of school buildings. He said authority of various school officials would be increased as well as "the means at their command."

In Nice, the bomb went off at 3 a.m. in a university physics classroom, causing extensive damage. Police said the bomb was extremely sophisticated "and only explosive specialists could have rigged it up."

A group of extreme leftist students had met in the classroom until late last night and another meeting had been scheduled for tonight.

Search for Explosives

The university was ordered closed and police searched its buildings for other explosives.

In Strasbourg, students today evacuated the university campus. They had occupied it since violent demonstrations on Wednesday in which at least 75 persons were injured.

The students left the university after extra security forces were moved in to clear them.

Militant Protestant's Sentence Of Death Commuted in Ulster

BELFAST, April 6 (Reuters).—A member of the Protestants' militant Ulster Defense Association today had his death sentence for killing a policeman commuted to life imprisonment by Britain's administrator of the province, William Whitelaw.

Albert Browne, a 39-year-old father of two, had been convicted in February of shooting a policeman who stopped the hijacked car Browne was driving outside Belfast last October.

If the death sentence had been carried out, he would have been the first person to be hanged in Northern Ireland since 1961. The province is the only part of the United Kinkdom where capital punishment is still in force—and it can be applied only to murderers of soldiers or policemen on duty.

There had been a widespread campaign for a reprieve for Browne, a television engineer, in both the Protestant and Catholic communities here.

Catholics' Fears

Many Catholics who support the militant Provisional wing of the outlawed Irish Republican Army feared that Browne's hanging would have set a precedent for death sentences on IRA men.

The IRA Provisionals had issued a warning that any hangman "risked death himself" if he executed Browne. The UDA had warned that it might take "undemocratic measures" to protest if Browne were hanged.

After the reprieve, Browne's wife spent an hour with him at Crumlin Road Prison. She said later that they were grateful to Mr. Whitelaw. "I have always thought he was a good man, now I think he is wonderful," she added.

Only a few incidents during the night disturbed the calm that has settled over Northern Ireland in the last few days.

Booby Trap Hurts 5

In Londonderry a soldier and four civilians were slightly injured when a booby-trapped bomb went off in a derelict house in the staunchly Catholic Bogside district.

In North Belfast, a bomb explosion set afire a house being constructed for a Catholic priest, but no one was injured.

A shopkeeper was hospitalized after being shot in the chest by a young raider in the city's University district yesterday.

A Sympathy Gesture

BELFAST, April 6 (UPI).—Catholic housewives of the Andersonstown district, an IRA stronghold, today sent a dozen rose bushes to the British Army in memory of three soldiers killed March 23.

"Wreaths die so quickly and we thought this would be more appropriate," they said in a message.

Maj. Gen. Robert Ford, commander of troops in Northern Ireland, planted one of the bushes outside the church at the army's Lisburn headquarters.

"Maybe it's a sign for the future," an army spokesman said. "God, we need one. These women risk punishment for this great gesture."

Europe Panel States Probe

STRASBOURG, April 6 (UPI).—The European Commission on Human Rights announced today that it would study charges that Britain violated individual liberties by mistreating interned suspects in Northern Ireland.

The charges were brought by seven Ulster residents who said they were tortured or treated in a degrading manner by police and the British Army.

Mrs. Heinemann Pelted With Eggs

BERLIN, April 6 (UPI).—Children pelted Mrs. Hilda Heinemann, wife of West German President Gustav Heinemann, with eggs today when she paid a visit to a left-wing youth center.

Parents of the children carried a banner reading, "The children play in filth—it's swept up for Mrs. Heinemann."

One egg hit Mrs. Heinemann's hat and another the front of her coat.

The incident took place on a visit to the Bethanien youth center. The president and his wife arrived in West Berlin today for a four-day visit. They make such trips from time to time to emphasize West German ties with the city.

Nationalists on Isle of Man Call Its Rulers Venal, Ask U.K. Probe

DOUGLAS, Isle of Man, April 6 (Reuters).—Nationalists on this island in the Irish Sea are urging Britain's Queen Elizabeth to suspend their 1,000-year-old Parliament.

Mec Vannin, the Manx nationalist party, made the plea yesterday amid allegations of corruption in high places and following arson attacks and bomb threats against property owned by immigrants from the British mainland.

The nationalists' petition to the queen, whose title here is Lord of Man, urges her to prorogue—suspend—Tynwald, one of the world's oldest legislative assemblies.

They also want British or Commonwealth judges to conduct an inquiry into the administration of the island's 56,000 inhabitants.

Mec Vannin wants the investigative tribunal to examine the "propriety and legality" of Tynwald members' relationships with commercial and financial interests. The nationalists believe that the resort island's prosperity is not being harnessed for the benefit of its permanent inhabitants.

The Isle of Man is legally a sovereign country under the British crown, and its legislature and judiciary administer its own laws. The 35 members of Tynwald wield almost absolute power in the island, situated midway between England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland.

Using 2 Women as Hostages, 2 Bandits Get Million Marks

WORMS, West Germany, April 6 (UPI).—Police today employed helicopters and bloodhounds in a hunt for two bank robbers who escaped with a million marks after bargaining their way to freedom by training machine guns on two women hostages.

The police began using the helicopters and dogs to track the gunmen through hilly farmland after a cross-country auto chase, in which the women were freed unhurt.

The police said the fugitives had thrown away their face masks, trench coats, scarves and hats in their flight, but kept a satchel bulging with the million marks that had been paid over by police as ransom for the two women bank tellers.

The gunmen were trapped by police yesterday during an attempted bank robbery in the Ruhr district city of Moenchengladbach.

Police paid the million-mark ransom demand and furnished the gunmen with a gray Mercedes getaway car "in order to avoid bloodshed" after five hours of negotiations.

After taking the hostages with them, the men raced back and forth across West Germany for six hours at speeds up to 90 miles per hour, with police cars in pursuit. The chase ended at 3:30 a.m. when the gunmen abandoned their car near this west-central town.

The gunmen had freed one of the women at Cologne early in the chase and released the second where they abandoned the car in a streetside flower bed.

They had forced police to give up pursuit shortly before this point by threatening to kill the second woman "if you don't get off our backs."

Police said only one shot was fired during the 11 hours of the bank siege and auto chase. That occurred when one fugitive leaned out of his speeding car and fired a shot into the night air, hitting no one.

Officials at Worms said that some 600 policemen were deployed on foot in the search. They were supported by six helicopters and nine bloodhounds. Police circulated descriptions of the men and warned motorists not to pick up hitchhikers in the region.

Russia Criticizes West in Helsinki, Talks Adjourn

HELSINKI, April 6 (AP).—The 34 nations preparing the European Security Conference adjourned today for three weeks. The Soviet Union criticized the West for "lack of political will."

In the last plenary session of the third round of the preparatory consultations, which started on Nov. 22, Ambassador Valerian Zorin, the main adviser for the Soviet delegation, accused the Western participants of "running on the spot" instead of making real progress in drafting an agenda for the conference.

Western diplomats, puzzled by the hard tone of the Soviet remarks, said that on many points, progress had been made. They thought it likely that the preparatory talks would be concluded toward the end of May, enabling the first stage of the actual conference to take place at the end of June at the ministerial level.

The main stumbling block was the question of a "freer flow of information and people," it was reported. The fourth round of the preparatory talks will begin on April 25.

Efforts Stepped Up

VIENNA, April 6 (UPI).—NATO and Warsaw Pact negotiators have stepped up their efforts to get the stalled East-West Mutual and Balanced Force Reduction talks started, a NATO spokesman said today.

Smallpox Shots Given in London

LONDON, April 6 (Reuters).—Hundreds of airline passengers received emergency smallpox inoculations at London's two major airports today following the hospitalization here of three persons afflicted by the disease.

Italy, Cyprus, Malta and Greece had advised British airlines that arriving passengers would have to produce valid smallpox vaccination certificates before being allowed through immigration controls.

One young woman caught the disease while watching a smallpox experiment at a London medical school. The two other cases were a husband and wife who visited a hospital ward where the young woman was confined.

Envoy to Holland Quits

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif., Apr. 6 (UPI).—President Nixon yesterday accepted with "regret and special appreciation for his contributions" the resignation of J. William Middendorf 2d as ambassador to the Netherlands. The White House announced that Mr. Middendorf, who has held the post since June 13, 1969, plans to return to private life. No successor was named.

2 Bombings in Portugal

LISBON, April 6 (Reuters).—Two time-bomb blasts heavily damaged a recruiting center and another military office in the northern city of Oporto early today. No casualties were reported, an official spokesman said. The explosions were thought to be the work of leftist organizations.

Dr. Eugene P. Cronkite, chairman of the laboratory's medical department, explained that in the experiments only a small number of human bone marrow cells—between 1,000 and 1,000,000 —are put into the chamber. The chamber is then implanted in the mouse, where the cells are allowed to grow for several weeks.

At first, the number of cells dwindles as the mature ones die, he said. Later, the total number grows to as many as 10 million, and they differentiate into all the types found in normal marrow, the chairman said.

These include not only the several different kinds of white blood cells, including scavenger cells and other immunologically active types, but also some red blood cells. Among the immunologically active cells are plasma cells, which are normally responsible for generating protective antibodies. The scientist said they appear to be producing antibodies in the experiments at Brookhaven, but whether these are directed against something from the mouse or from the cell's original human environment is unknown.

The mouse is prevented from producing antibodies against the contents of the chamber by heavy doses of radiation given before the experiments begin.

So far, mouse cells have been grown in chambers implanted in mice, rabbit cells in rabbits, goat cells in goats and human cells in mice.

Dr. Cronkite said that other methods of growing bone marrow cells under artificial conditions are known, but that in general, these tend to produce only a few types of white cells and nonred cells.

Several laboratories have also developed artificial substitutes for red blood cells, but research in this area is entirely distinct from the studies at Brookhaven on natural components of blood and the cells that form it.

One of the advantages claimed for the system is that the chamber can be removed at any time for study of its contents. Thus, the blood formation process can be analyzed in detail.

The scientists at Brookhaven have already used the system to grow cells from patients suffering from leukemia, a cancer of the blood-forming tissues, and hope that it may prove possible to test the effectiveness of drugs against such cells growing in the chambers.

U.S. Bans Dye Used on Meat As Cancer Risk

WASHINGTON, April 6 (IHT).—The purple dye used for years to stamp grades on meat and to color other products ranging from ice cream to pet foods has been banned by the U.S. government because new studies in Japan indicate it may cause cancer.

The Food and Drug Administration yesterday revoked its approval for "Violet No. 1," the use of which has been permitted in the United States for 22 years.

The FDA said two unpublished Japanese studies found that rats given the dye in quantities equaling 5 percent of their diet had shown signs of cancer. The Agriculture Department said alternative dyes would be used to mark their meats.

Peru Leads Drive Against U.S. as OAS Talks Open

WASHINGTON, April 6 (WP). —Peru fired the opening salvo yesterday in a campaign by several Latin American countries to reduce U.S. influence in the Organization of American States.

Speaking at the General Assembly of the inter-American organization, Peruvian Foreign Minister Gen. Miguel Angel de la Flor said that while the OAS was created to encourage cooperation between Latin America and the United States, its meetings "turned into expressions of agreement with the policies of the big country to the north . . . from cooperation to subordination."

Gen. de la Flor, who sat next to U.S. Secretary of State William P. Rogers, listed the grievances expressed by many Latin American nations against U.S. economic and trade policies, and declared: "Imperialism has been and still is present in America in both its old and new manifestations, from which we must defend ourselves and make a common front."

He made several proposals for reorganizing the OAS, including moving the headquarters away from Washington. A Washington location, he said, was "inappropriate" both because "its geographical location keeps it far removed from the realities of Latin America" and because it is "the capital of the country which has the strongest political influence."

Covert U.S. Moves to Defeat Allende in '64 Are Portrayed

By Laurence Stern

WASHINGTON, April 6 (WP).—Large-scale intervention by the Central Intelligence Agency and the State Department helped to defeat Socialist Salvador Allende in the 1964 election for president of Chile, according to knowledgeable official sources.

American corporate and governmental involvement against Mr. Allende's successful candidacy in 1970 has been the controversial focus of a Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee investigation into the activities of multinational companies.

But the previously undisclosed scale of American support for Christian Democrat Eduardo Frei against Mr. Allende six years earlier makes the events of 1970 seem "like a tea party," according to one former intelligence official involved in the 1964 effort.

The story of the American campaign, early in the Johnson administration, to prevent the first Marxist government from coming to power in the Western Hemisphere by constitutional means was pieced together from the accounts of officials who participated in the actions and policies of that period.

Cold war ideology lingered, and the shock of Fidel Castro's seizure of power in Cuba was still reverberating in Washington. "No more Fidels" was the guidepost of U.S. foreign policy in Latin America under the Alliance for Progress. Washington's zest for political engagement in the third world had not yet been dimmed by the agonies of the Vietnam war.

'All Sorts of Covers'

"U.S. government intervention in Chile in 1964 was blatant and almost obscene," said one man who was a strategically placed intelligence officer at the time. "We were shipping people off right and left, mainly State Department but also CIA, with all sorts of covers."

One CIA program's purpose was to neutralize Communist influence in important opinion-molding sectors such as trade unions, farmer and peasant organizations, student activities and communication media.

At least one conduit for CIA money, the International Development Foundation, was employed in the 1964 campaign to subsidize Chilean peasant organizations, according to a former official who was responsible for monitoring assistance to Chile from the Agency for International Development.

A former member of the IDF board, who quit when he discovered its links with the CIA, said: "Some of us had suspected for a long time that the foundation was subsidized by the agency. Then it finally surfaced, and it was impossible to continue serving on it. Nonetheless, what they were doing was consonant with President Kennedy's policies in the alliance—political development."

The foundation is still in existence, although its CIA funding was terminated. It now is financed by AID appropriations.

Covert financing was arranged for a newspaper friendly to the political interests of Christian Democrat Frei. "The layout was magnificent. The photographs were superb. It was a Madison Avenue product far above the standards of Chilean publications," recalled another State Department veteran of the campaign.

One former high-ranking diplomat said CIA operations at the time were bypassing the ambassador's office, despite the 1962 Kennedy letter issued by the late President after the Bay of Pigs debacle. The letter designated ambassadors as the primary authority for all U.S. operations within their country.

As the 1964 election campaign unfolded in Chile, the American intelligence and diplomatic establishments were divided from within over whether to support Mr. Frei or a more conservative candidate, Sen. Julio Duran.

Sen. Duran dropped from consideration when he lost an important by-election to the Communists, and gradually the entire thrust of American support went to Mr. Frei.

"The State Department maintained a facade of neutrality and proclaimed it from time to time," according to one source who played an important Washington role in inter-American policy at the time of the election.

"Individual officers—an economic counselor or a political counselor—would look for opportunities. And where it was a question of passing money, forming a newspaper or community development program, the operational people would do the work."

A former U.S. ambassador to Chile has privately estimated that the far-flung covert program in Mr. Frei's behalf cost about $30 million. In contrast, the figure that emerged in Senate hearings as the amount that the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. was willing to spend in 1970 to defeat Mr. Allende was $1 million.

100 'Special Personnel'

The number of "special personnel" dispatched at various stages of the 1964 campaign to Chile from Washington and other posts was calculated by one key Latin American policymaker at the time as being in the range of 100.

In addition to U.S. governmental assistance, money was being funneled into Chile in Mr. Frei's behalf by the German and Italian Christian Democratic parties.

Moon-Walker Irwin Suffers Heart Attack

AURORA, Colo., April 6 (AP).—Lt. Col. James Irwin, a former Apollo-15 astronaut who walked on the moon, was in satisfactory condition yesterday after suffering a heart attack, Fitzsimons Army Medical Center reported.

A hospital spokesman said Col. Irwin, 43, was under observation in the cardiac care unit of the hospital. He was hospitalized Wednesday after suffering chest pains while playing handball. He was reported resting comfortably yesterday.

Col. Irwin spent more than two days on the moon in August, 1971. He experienced several heart irregularities while walking on its surface, and later had the most trouble of the three Apollo-15 astronauts in readjusting to the earth's gravity.

Bid for Unity Takes New Tack

8 Major Protestant Groups In U.S. Shelve Merger Plan

By Edward B. Fiske

MEMPHIS, April 6 (NYT).—Representatives of eight major Protestant denominations voted unanimously today to shelve for the time being efforts to reach agreement on a detailed plan for their merger into a 22-million-member Protestant church.

Instead, delegates to the 11th plenary meeting of the Consultation on Church Union decided to sponsor experiments in ecumenical cooperation at the local church level in order to develop data and ideas for use in the creation of a unified structure in the future.

The decision represented a shift in tactics in the quest for church union, from the negotiating differences to creating situations in which churches might "grow together" and develop unified structures out of common experiences.

"It's a more realistic approach," said the Rev. Paul A. Crow jr., general secretary of the merger talks, following the decision. "Union will come through involvement of the people."

Churches Involved

The churches involved are the African Methodist Episcopal Church, African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, Christian Church (Disciples of Christ), Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, Episcopal Church, Presbyterian Church in the United States (Southern), United Church of Christ and United Methodist Church.

The United Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. (Northern) was a founding member of the consultation, but last year its ruling General Assembly, in what was seen as part of a general discontent with policies of its national leadership, voted to withdraw. The 1973 General Assembly, which meets next month, will consider several proposals to rejoin.

Today's shift by the consultation, which came at the end of a five-day annual meeting here, resulted from widespread dissatisfaction within the member churches regarding the detailed merger plan that was approved by the Consultation in St. Louis three years ago and sent to the churches for discussion and comment.

A major factor in the popular ejection of the proposed plan seemed to be resentment at what was widely perceived as an effort by church leaders to make radical changes in American Protestant life without consulting the vast majority of churchgoers.

Changing Times

"Times have changed," said the Rev. Robert V. Moss jr., president of the United Church of Christ and a member of its delegation here. "In the mid-1960s, people were ready to move the way other church mergers did. Now, there is greater emphasis on participation. You can't move the same way in the 1970s."

The Rev. William A. Benfield jr., a southern Presbyterian delegate and chairman of the committee that presented the draft plan three years ago, called the new direction a realistic one. "This means it becomes a movement of the people," he said.

The result of today's action was to postpone any hopes for bringing about in the near future the merger of a group of major Protestant denominations. Such a merger was first proposed in 1960 by the Rev. Eugene Carson Blake, then stated clerk of the United Presbyterian Church, in a sermon in Grace Episcopal Cathedral in San Francisco. The Consultation was formed shortly afterward to conduct the merger negotiations.

Three years ago, leaders were expressing hope that the merger plan they had developed might be accepted by all or most of the participating denominations by 1980. Now no one is talking in terms of any specific timetable.

Candidates Weighed to Head FBI After Gray's Withdrawal

WASHINGTON, April 6 (AP).—A Justice Department official, a former Illinois governor and a Los Angeles judge are among those being rumored as possible successor to L. Patrick Gray 3d as director of the FBI.

President Nixon decided last night that the Senate would not accept Mr. Gray, his first choice, who apparently fell victim to the Watergate bugging case. He announced from the Western White House that he acceded to a request by Mr. Gray and withdrew his name because "it is obvious that Mr. Gray's nomination will not be confirmed by the Senate."

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Mr. Nixon had not decided on a successor and that the preliminary screening of possible nominees had not even begun.

But during Mr. Gray's month of appearances before the Senate Judiciary Committee, several names were mentioned in Washington circles.

Heading the rumor list are John E. Ingersoll, director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs; former Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie of Illinois, and U. S. District Court Judge Matt Byrne of Los Angeles, who is presiding over the Pentagon papers trial.

Also mentioned have been Henry E. Petersen, head of the Justice Department's criminal division, and Police Chief Jerry V. Wilson of the District of Columbia. But some administration sources say they doubt that either would be considered.

The Washington Post today quoted sources as saying that administration officials have sounded out Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman James O. Eastland, of Mississippi, and Democratic Whip Robert Byrd, of West Virginia, to see if Mr. Petersen and Mr. Ingersoll would be acceptable.

Gray Statement

Mr. Gray said he asked Mr. Nixon to withdraw his name because it is "my deep conviction that the FBI, a great and unique American institution of vital service to the President and the American people, is entitled to permanent leadership at the earliest possible time."

Mr. Gray has been in trouble almost from the beginning in seeking confirmation before the Judiciary Committee because of his actions in heading the FBI's investigation of the bugging and burglary of Democratic headquarters last year.

He ignited the wrath of Democratic senators when he disclosed that he had given raw FBI files compiled during the investigation to White House counsel John W. Dean 3d.

Mr. Gray also told the committee he continued the practice even after concluding that Mr. Dean probably lied to FBI agents.

President Nixon suggested that Mr. Gray was the unfortunate victim of the Watergate controversy.

In his statement, Mr. Nixon said: "Because I asked my counsel, John Dean, to conduct a thorough investigation of alleged involvement in the Watergate episode, Director Gray was asked to make FBI reports available to Mr. Dean.

"His compliance with this completely proper and necessary request exposed Mr. Gray to totally unfair innuendo and suspicion and thereby seriously tarnished his fine record as acting director and promising future at the bureau."

Mr. Nixon said he had asked Mr. Gray to stay on until a successor is approved by the Senate.

Sen. Byrd, who led the committee fight to defeat the Gray nomination, said Mr. Nixon did the proper thing in withdrawing his name.

"I would hope that the President would quickly send up the nomination of someone who has law-enforcement experience, integrity, ability and independence," he said. "Someone who has no connection with the political espionage of the Watergate case."

Sen. Byrd also proposed the removal of the FBI from the Justice Department and its establishment as an independent agency with a director serving a fixed term.

Sen. Byrd's bill was co-sponsored by Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana and Sen. Lloyd M. Bentsen, D., Texas.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D., Wash., introduced a separate measure calling for a 15-year term for the FBI director and requiring "extensive professional experience" including at least 10 years in a responsible FBI position.

Sen. Byrd, who was one of Mr. Gray's leading opponents and had predicted the nomination would not be confirmed, said the issue was not who should head the FBI. He said: "The key issue ought to be the determination just what the role of the FBI will be in the future."

His bill provides for a director and deputy director, nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, with a seven-year term. But he said in discussing the bill that he might favor a longer term, possibly with a ban on reappointment.

Immunity Given To McCord in Watergate Case

WASHINGTON, April 6 (WP).—Convicted Watergate conspirator James W. McCord jr. was granted immunity yesterday from further prosecution, clearing the way for him to disclose whatever knowledge he has of illegal political espionage activities to a federal grand jury and a Senate investigating committee.

Shortly after the immunity had been conferred by chief Judge John J. Sirica of U.S. District Court, McCord began answering questions before the same grand jury that indicted him in the Watergate conspiracy on Sept. 15.

Saying that "the story should be told" publicly about the Watergate bugging and perhaps other illegal activities, McCord told reporters he would meet with them sometime next week in an on-the-record press conference.

McCord is also expected to be an early witness in public hearings held by the Senate's Select Committee investigating the Watergate bugging and other political espionage and sabotage activities.

In a closed-door hearing before the committee last week, McCord said his superiors in the conspiracy told him that high presidential aides had advance knowledge of the bugging of Democratic headquarters. However, he invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination and didn't answer the Senators' questions about additional illegal activities he may know about.

McCord appeared before the Watergate grand jury yesterday and again invoked the Fifth Amendment, this time in response to such questions as whether he had attempted to plant electronic bugs in Sen. George S. McGovern's campaign headquarters.

Pioneer-11 Heads Toward Jupiter

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla., April 6 (AP).—America's Pioneer-11 spacecraft raced on a near-perfect course today for Jupiter, with a chance it later might also explore Saturn.

The 570-pound, $43-million payload was launched from Cape Kennedy last night on a 620-million-mile interplanetary trail that Pioneer-10 started blazing 13 months ago.

Pioneer-10 is to fly within 87,000 miles of Jupiter next December, while Pioneer-11 a year later is to scout a different area of the largest planet in the solar system.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration reported that the spacecraft would require only a brief motor firing on Monday to put it on target.

Soviet Media Silent on Salyut

MOSCOW, April 6 (Reuters).—Soviet news media today maintained complete silence on the Salyut-2 space laboratory mission amid persistent rumors that cosmonauts were prepared to take off shortly to man the station.

There have been no reports of Salyut's progress since the initial announcement Tuesday evening by the news agency Tass that the craft had been launched.

Normally, the Soviet press gives regular, if brief, coverage to the work being carried out by space probes. The total lack of information on this occasion has led observers to believe that something more spectacular is planned.

However, in Portland, Maine, a spokesman for First National Stores said beef and pork prices at the 50 stores in the chain's New England divisions would be 10 cents below the ceiling, starting on Monday.

He said the reduction was the result of lower costs to the retailer. He said meat sales were down 15 to 20 percent during boycott week.

R.C. Williams, operator of the Arkansas National stockyards at Little Rock, said today's hog price was down $1 from yesterday. Hogs sold at $36.5 a hundredweight, he said, compared to last week's high of $41.

'Wait and See'

Mr. Williams said the market had moved up and down erratically, confusing farmers who couldn't be sure what they would get for their livestock. "Buyers are uncertain too," he said, "about how much they need. They've got a wait-and-see attitude, maybe until Monday. The buyers want to be sure of how much they'll need and the sellers want the market to stabilize before they bring their stock in to sell."

Hog prices were generally lower today at the National stockyards in Illinois and spokesmen said there were not enough cattle or sheep on hand for a good market test.

At the wholesale level, a spokesman for Blue Ribbon Packing Co., a Houston, Texas, slaughterhouse, said the firm killed only 700 beef cattle this week, compared to 1,250 or 1,300 during a normal week.

Ed Fain, vice-president of Colonial Stores Inc., with about 50 outlets in the Atlanta area, said he didn't know whether business would pick up tomorrow.

He said stores may face a shortage of meat next week because so many packing houses have shut down. "Pork looks good," Mr. Fain said, "but beef, we just don't know. We have not lowered any prices. You are going to see a lot of gimmicks, a lot of prices advertised as the lowest in town and that sort of thing, but the supply is going to determine the price."

The AP checked the prices of round steak, center cut pork chops, ground chuck, sirloin steak, veal cutlet, rib lamb chops, leg of lamb and rib roast in selected cities on Monday and rechecked yesterday. There were only scattered changes either up or down, although several of the higher priced cuts were unavailable, particularly near the end of the week.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D., N.Y., said boycott leaders would meet in Washington next Wednesday to plan further action.

"The boycott has been an incredible success as far as the numbers participating is concerned," he said. "We must harness their efforts to get some meaningful reforms."

Two Deaths Spur Drug Co. Recalls

BERKELEY, Calif., April 6 (AP).—Cutter Laboratories, Inc., has recalled millions of bottles of intravenous solution that were manufactured at its Chattanooga, Tenn., factory in what it called a "prudent" measure. The action expands on a recall two weeks ago of a dextrose intravenous solution, called Lactated Ringer's Injection, after Mount Sinai Hospital in Milwaukee reported that two women died from post-surgery infections after receiving the dextrose solution.

Two other women also were stricken, the hospital reported, and one recovered and the other is in critical condition. On March 20, Cutter recalled 66,000 bottles of the dextrose solution. In the new recall, Cutter's public relations director here, Joe Barnett, estimated that "millions of bottles and of dollars" are involved.

The Food and Drug Administration's Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta is investigating the Milwaukee cases.

6 AF Bombs Jar U.S. Park Crew

LAS VEGAS, April 6 (AP).—An A-7D jet fighter accidentally dropped six 500-pound bombs yesterday near a field station at the Desert National Wildlife Refuge northwest of here, an Air Force spokesman said today. The five persons inside were uninjured.

The bombs fell about 250 yards from the Corn Creek station, breaking windows in one residence and in a carpenter shop, but causing no other damage, the spokesman said. Five persons live at the station, administered by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The bombs were dropped while the plane was practicing bombing at a Nellis Air Force Base range about 10 miles northwest of the field station.

A Hollow Victory

After the Senate sustained his veto of the vocational rehabilitation bill, President Nixon issued a victory statement which, like his original veto message, had a curiously abstract and arid quality. Both documents addressed themselves very much to ideological dogma and very little to the human realities of this society in 1973.

According to the President, the inability of the Senate to override his veto provided "a resounding victory for the American taxpayer." Because "enough senators had enough courage to stand up against the big spenders in defense of the average American's pocketbook, the tide in this battle of the budget is running in the people's favor."

But whom did "the people" defeat in this battle? The bill would have renewed the half-century-old program of grants to the states for vocational training for the handicapped. That program will now be renewed on a financially more limited basis acceptable to the President. The bill would also have expanded the program to cover certain categories of people who are virtually unemployable—those suffering from spinal cord injuries, older persons who are blind or deaf, the seriously retarded and others who are severely handicapped.

Those afflicted people are not going to go away. Their problems and their suffering are as real today as they were before the veto.

A veto might have been defended as a temporary expedient if President Nixon had a tidier administrative arrangement to propose, but none has been forthcoming. The President and his aides speak vaguely of "overlapping and duplication," but in reality help of the kind that Congress specified is not available for the unemployable handicapped under any program. They, like the poor, have simply been told to wait in line to see what if anything they may get from the cities and the states under special revenue sharing in the future.

The dogmatic belief that the American people can overcome inflation by neglecting the needs of the cruelly afflicted persons in their midst is hardly credible. But President Nixon was also using the handicapped to teach Congress a political and ideological lesson. Approval of an expanded program for them would, in his words, have opened the dikes to a flood of additional "overspending bills." The blind, the crippled and the paralyzed have the satisfaction therefore of knowing that they have helped save the taxpayer the cost not only of their own treatment and retraining but also of subsidies for other persons who may or may not deserve them.

* * *

There has never been much doubt that Mr. Nixon could pursue this veto strategy successfully. President Eisenhower stymied the Democratic-controlled Congress of 1959-60 when liberal strength was considerably greater than it is today. In the present instance, if the Senate had not sustained the veto, the House certainly would have done so.

In wielding the veto, the President is on firm constitutional ground in contrast to the shaky legal basis for his impoundment of funds already appropriated and his unilateral dismantling of congressionally mandated agencies such as the Office of Economic Opportunity. A Federal Appellate Court has already ruled against Mr. Nixon's impoundment of Highway Trust Fund money in a Missouri test case. Congress meanwhile is seeking to tack a strong anti-impoundment bill onto a piece of legislation which the President will find difficult to veto. Sooner or later, Congress and the courts are likely to rebuff effectively Mr. Nixon's more arrogant pretentions on fiscal issues.

But the veto power will remain. In this first of a series of veto battles, Mr. Nixon has shown that even the handicapped are not exempt from the workings of his reactionary social philosophy. This administration has set its face against reform of the internal revenue code, which is honeycombed with business subsidies. It has tolerated huge cost overruns in the Pentagon, fired or suspended career officials who exposed these malpractices, bailed out arms contractors with loans and initiated huge maritime subsidies.

As that record suggests, the administration's battle against inflation is a highly selective one: it is largely conducted at the expense of the weakest and most impoverished elements of society.

Pakistan's Agile Dancer

"Politics is like dancing," President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto of Pakistan told a recent visitor. "You have to be nimble on your feet."

Since he took over the state in Islamabad from a discredited military regime 15 months ago, Mr. Bhutto has treated the world to a dazzling display of fast political footwork. But there is a growing danger that he may yet be tripped up by angry bystanders. That would be a tragedy not only for Mr. Bhutto but for Pakistan and its neighbors.

The obstacle that could lead to Mr. Bhutto's fall and to chaos in Pakistan is the new draft constitution he has been attempting to steer through a recalcitrant National Assembly. Some of the opposition is rooted in religious and feudal traditions that Pakistan will have to discard if it is to emerge as a strong modern state. For example, one religious leader from a tribal area in the Northwest Frontier Province stood up in the assembly recently to denounce as "un-Islamic" a provision of the proposed constitution forbidding slavery. A poor man who cannot afford two wives should be allowed at least one slave girl, he argued.

A more substantive focus of objections to the constitution, however, lies in genuine fears that it would give too much power to the prime minister, a position Mr. Bhutto confidently expects to fill, and to a central government which will inevitably be dominated by Punjabis, who make up 60 percent of truncated Pakistan. Mr. Bhutto probably has enough votes to push his draft through the assembly, but if he should attempt to do so he runs grave risk of precipitating violent resistance in the restive Northwest Frontier and Baluchi Provinces—a re-enactment of the Bangladesh tragedy that could lead to the final dismemberment of Pakistan. Compromise, which the president has been seeking, is in the best interest of all parties.

Although they have good reason to mistrust Mr. Bhutto, neither New Delhi nor Dacca can take comfort from the present disarray in Islamabad. If Mr. Bhutto can consolidate his position, there is at least a chance for progress toward democratic civilian rule in Pakistan and peace on the subcontinent. If he fails, there is likely to be no peace for a long time to come.

India and Bangladesh could improve the prospects for peace and perhaps influence chances for stability in Islamabad by removing a major source of Pakistani anxiety—that is, to release over 90,000 Pakistani prisoners of war held in India for more than a year now.

The prisoner issue is evidently troubling Indian Prime Minister Gandhi, who a few days ago dispatched a special envoy to Dacca, presumably to urge her Bengali allies to be more flexible. This should not be too much to ask of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman fresh from his triumph in the Bangladesh election, on behalf of President Bhutto, who saved his life and set him free 15 months ago.

'Peace' in Vietnam

The Vietnamese are going through their peace apprenticeship in the worst of conditions, those resulting from an armed conflict which . . . was actually a civil war . . . Whatever trials await them, they know that their future is in their own hands. This is important because it is the first time in more than 100 years that they stand alone and are not the pawns of third powers. They must now rid themselves of problems that are no longer theirs.

Is Hanoi preparing the third round of the Indochina war? Almost two months after conclusion of the cease-fire agreement, peace is still a very remote possibility. There are indications that this cease-fire is a dangerous transitional stage, exploited by the Communists for their own purposes.

Hanoi is not planning another all-out offensive. Perhaps it is merely trying to pull even with Saigon, which was supplied considerable amounts of war materiel shortly before the cease-fire . . . but it certainly does not think of withdrawal and disarmament. It wants to keep its military options open, for which the cease-fire gives it the required breathing spell.

PARIS—The Cuban situation is not clearing; indeed, it seems more chaotic than ever. But there is this difference within the past 24 hours: that, whereas yesterday war seemed inevitable, today there is a slight hope for peace. Spain seems disposed to yield and to yield "everything that the United States will demand," according to the Madrid correspondent of Le Figaro, who adds that an armistice with the insurgents has already been agreed upon. But the world still holds its breath and hopes.

WASHINGTON, D.C.—A special Treasury Committee has just now pronounced the doom of the $2 bill, recommending its withdrawal from circulation and cessation of further printing because it offers an easy temptation to professional tamperers. The decision of the committee, in recommending this course, makes it plain that it is not yielding to popular superstition regarding the $2 notes, but wishes to halt the growth of activity of "marking up" these notes to higher denominations, a comparatively easy task.

'It's Kind of Like the Sistine Chapel'

Some Surprises in Estonia

By Anthony Lewis

TALLINN, U.S.S.R.—The capital of Soviet Estonia has at its center an old town of medieval shapes and shadows. The streets are cobbled and narrow, the hills steep. Red-tiled conical turrets surround the old town, and above it soar the extraordinary spires of Baltic Protestant churches.

In the Town Hall square a wrought-iron gate leads to a small building with a television studio in the vaulted cellar. There, Estonian television makes "consumer information" films for all the Soviet Union, explaining the latest detergent or anti-static liquid. When some Americans came in for a drink recently, one large-screen TV set in the room was showing a Moscow lecture and another a documentary on Finnish television, from Helsinki.

Soviet Estonia is full of surprises. Architecture and attitudes, people's looks and feelings are quite different from the Soviet Union that visitors see in Moscow. The atmosphere is easier, as the business of Finnish television indicates: People watch and talk about it with no evident constraint.

Spirit Survives

The most striking impression of a visit is how Estonian the spirit of the place is, nearly 33 years after the Soviet Union took over this and the two other Baltic republics, Latvia and Lithuania. It is not a question of thinking about independence or any such idle idea. It is rather that, within the Soviet Union, the Estonian Republic enjoys a notable distinctiveness.

Language is a symbol. Estonian, which is related to Finnish, remains the common tongue. Many signs are in Estonian and Russian, but some on shops are Estonian only. The savage and controversial Soviet film "Andrei Rublev" is shown with Estonian subtitles. Children are taught in the language of their parents, which means that 70 percent of the schools are in Estonian from day-care through university.

An intellectual plainly devoted to the Marxist system nevertheless talks in terms of Estonian habits, history, culture. He notes that one of four school graduates goes to the Estonian Republic's Tartu University, compared with one of 10 to Leningrad and an even smaller proportion to Moscow University.

Tallinn's population is under 400,000. The city architect, an elegant and sophisticated man, says, "We don't want the city too big," so factories are allowed to expand only when housing for workers is available. There is almost certainly involved here also a general local reluctance about immigration from elsewhere in the Soviet Union.

'No' to Tannery

The city architect recently said "no" to a tannery's application to rebuild its plant, because he thought the smells and pollution out of place in Tallinn. The tannery builders appealed to the city and the republic's Soviet, but was turned down. It is now moving to a site near Leningrad.

The cultural activity in Tallinn is staggering by our standards. The week I was there the opera house played Verdi's "Trovatore," Mozart's "Seraglio," Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin" and a number of ballets. Musicals showing were "Man of La Mancha" and a local version of "Love Story." The Moscow Chamber Orchestra played Bach and Vivaldi, and there was a performance of Verdi's "Requiem" that would have graced New York or London—by the Estonian Radio Orchestra and chorus. All that when the whole republic's population is 1.3 million.

There are Estonian and Russian theaters. The ballet repertory in the last few years has included modern works to the music of Bartok, Stravinsky and Barber as well as the classics. The opera has done six Verdi operas, five Puccini, Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier," Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess."

But it is the architecture of the old town that would probably most appeal to the Western visitor. Restoration work is going on, and a sizable economic commitment has been made to preserve that past.

In terms of tourism, Tallinn also offers a modern hotel that really works, the 22-story Hotel Viru, designed and executed jointly by Estonian and Finnish architects and workmen. The night life is pretty lively, too, in a 1950s sort of way: You can swing to Frank Sinatra or even tango.

Does it all mean something? Of course the fundamentals of a Communist state are no different in this republic of the Soviet Union. But there is a sense that local feelings matter and that variety is acceptable—in a way that has been possible here and there in Eastern Europe but not to this degree in the Soviet Union itself. For Russians as for outsiders, Soviet Estonia is a place of exceptional interest. In Moscow, Russians planning a visit to Tallinn say they are "going West."

Accent on Youth

The Changing Midwest

By James Reston

ST. PAUL, Minn.—The land in the upper Middle West still looks a little bleak and winter-weary these early April days; but a hungry world is crying for fodder, and the outlook for the farmers out here is unusually bright.

They are grumbling, of course, about the boycott against rising prices, but they are more patient than the city folk, who will probably be crowding the butcher counters again in a couple of weeks. "Give us this day our daily meat. . . ."

Unlike the Midwestern auto industry, which is running into increasing competition from Europe and Japan, and the aerospace industry in the Far West, which is running out of customers, American agriculture retains the scientific and trade advantages American industry is losing, and is now the best hope of solving the nation's balance of payments problem.

Energy and Bustle

You cannot come across these fertile geometric fields from the Ohio to the Mississippi without feeling the strength and energy and bustle of these people, particularly in the state of Minnesota, where youth seems always to be in the saddle.

Washington may be talking primarily about politicians in their 60s, but out here a new generation of leaders is rising. The attractive and intelligent governor of Minnesota, Wendell R. Anderson, is just 40 but has been in elective office here for 15 years.

Speaker Martin Sabo of the State House of Representatives has just turned 35, but is regarded as an old-timer, since he has been in the House since 1960, when he was first elected at the age of 21.

In the last election for the Minnesota legislature, the average age of state senators dropped from 48 to 42 and in the House from 45 to 42. (The average age of senators in Washington now is 55.3 and of members of the House is 51.1).

Things may look much the same on Capitol Hill in the federal capital, but here roughly 40 percent of the members of the state legislature are freshmen who were elected for the first time last November.

And this is not merely a mathematical point, for the Minnesota House voted 99-29 this week to give 18-year-olds full legal status as adults, and Anderson's budget allocates 54 percent of requested funds to education.

Minnesota, of course, usually seems younger and more progressive than most of the Midwestern states, and this is undoubtedly true today. Both Minnesota senators in Washington are Democrat-Farmer Labor, and the Minnesota delegation in the House is four Democrats and four Republicans, while the Republicans from all 12 Midwestern states in the House of Representatives outnumber the Democrats, 70-32.

Nevertheless, looking to the future, the political balance in the country seems to be changing, with the 13 states of the sunny crescent from California down through the Southwest and across to Florida beginning to challenge the Middle West, in Kevin Phillips's calculation, as "the leading national base of the Republican party."

This conclusion is open to challenge, for of course the Midwest was as unanimous for President Nixon last November as the rest of the country, but the Democrats now hold eight of the 12 Midwest governorships—Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Kansas and Nebraska—while the Republicans hold only four—Michigan, Missouri, Indiana and Iowa.

Last November, the Democrat-Farmer Labor party here won both houses of the Minnesota Legislature for the first time in history, and as Anderson remarked the other day: "This Minnesota pattern is in line with a major Democratic trend in the upper Midwest. In the combined areas of Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana," he added, "there are only two Republican U.S. senators and one Republican governor."

Helps Nixon

So something is going on out here that is not only helping Nixon with his world politics—producing the food that is his main bargaining tool but paradoxically seems to be helping the Democrats in state politics. The richer the industrial workers of the country get, the more they seem to vote Republican, but the richer the farmers get, the more they seem to back the Democrats in nonpresidential elections.

In 1929, one American farmer produced enough food for 12 people and will now soon be producing enough for 100. In 1939, farm income was only 50 percent of nonfarm income in the nation, but in 1972 it was 79 percent of nonfarm income.

No wonder then that, despite the habitual complaining in the farm belt, there is now an air of prosperity and an anticipation of more to come. Big Ten football seems to be in a slump, but the farmers are talking boom, and even saying nice things about the Russians and the Chinese, who promise to be good residual customers for years to come.

Sex and Ideology at Princeton

By William F. Buckley Jr.

NEW YORK—So the Sex Education, Counseling and Health Clinic at Princeton University, for reasons compelling as will be noted, decided to distribute to all Princeton students a "Birth Control Handbook"—presumably, among other reasons, to ease the pressure on the admissions office, a generation hence, of applicants who list both parents as being Princeton graduates. So far, pretty much routine. Most colleges shove out such information as a matter of course. But this handbook is special.

Before being distributed, it obtains the imprimatur of the advisory council to the clinic, a 15-member body which includes the vice-president for administrative affairs, the associate dean of the college, and the assistant dean of student affairs.

Pollution, Too

The handbook advises Princeton students on anatomical and sexual nuts and bolts, but there is more to come, as one might have anticipated from the cover design of the handbook which features a clenched-fist revolutionary salute and the slogan "Medicine for the People." "The fact of zero Population Growth claims to direct its propaganda primarily at white, middle class Americans," explains the Princeton handbook, "does nothing to eliminate the factor of racism which is an inevitable historical aspect of the U.S. population-control movement, financed and directed by America's white ruling class."

The handbook touches on quite a lot of extra-sexual points, for instance pollution. "We (Americans) are the villains because we individually submit to the billion dollar psychological warfare waged against us by Madison Avenue. We are the villains because we drive to work in the only transportation system made available by GM, Ford, and Chrysler. We are the villains because America's biggest industry is the war industry, that bleeds taxpayers dry and exists only for death, destruction, and ecological tragedy."

But even as the handbook has solutions for unwanted pregnancies, it has them for such social tragedies: Maoism. "For solutions, we have to turn to new methods of governing ourselves. The 700 million Chinese accomplished this by overthrowing their foreign exploiters, by taking control of their own natural riches . . . nothing short of equally basic social change in America and in the countries it exploits is going to bring solutions to our terrible problems of hunger, pollution, crime in the streets, racism, and war."

Meanwhile, the Princeton Alumni Weekly is carrying on a spirited investigation of life on the Princeton campus. Miss Susan Williams of the class of 1974, writes in a column "On The Campus" that the best guess is that 30 percent of the Princeton girls live with Princeton boys regularly, and an equal percentage, irregularly.

Now this can become troublesome, says Miss Williams. Not because there is anything wrong with such arrangements, but because they can be simply inconvenient. "Those who must fare with an actual roommate of the opposite sex," she explains, "everyday find themselves coping with more pressing exigencies. One girl, trapped in a one-room double, described how 'she hung a curtain down the middle of the room and then played the stereo loudly until 3 a.m. every night to drown out other noises.' And sometimes, it can be just plain tiresome and frustating to have to relate to an unrequested interloper among one's chosen roommates."

"One still hears it said," concludes Miss Williams—"not by students but by outsiders or older people, that students aren't engaging more in sex than they ever did; they just talk more freely about it. Somehow, though, it's hard to believe that a generation ago a woman could say that 30 percent of my friends are living with one person, and another 30 or 40 percent are sleeping with others."

Maoist Prudes

Now here is a suggestion I would like to make to the authors of the Princeton handbook. The Maoist revolution happens to be quite extraordinarily orthodox, not to say prudish, in sexual matters. In the People's Republic of China, men and women are quite thoroughly celibate until they marry, and like free love, prostitution is proscribed. So why don't Princeton Maoists begin their revolution by cleaning up sexual immorality in Princeton? Isn't that a good idea? Then they can move on to hunger, pollution, crime in the streets, racism, and war. I bet they never thought of that. But there will be future editions of their birth control handbook.

Italy's Needs

Did Paul Hofmann ("U.S.-Style University Rising in Long-Neglected Calabria," IHT, March 28) really visit Cosenza, or did he just take his dateline from the map of Italy?

For one thing, there are more than 40,000 students studying law in the Italian south. That says almost as much about the political-educational situation in the "Mezzogiorno" as why the government chose out-of-the-way Cosenza as a site in the first place. They simply feared another mini-civil war if they chose a more logical site outside of, or between, Reggio or Catanzaro.

Another point—one thing Italy doesn't need is more "engineers, geologists . . . economists and social scientists." There are already thousands of such laureates begging meaningful jobs today. What Italy does need is not only a radical reform of its educational system, but a socio-economic order which can welcome, utilize and reward the talents that its university graduates have to offer and contribute.

Torture

No practice is more repugnant to our common humanity than torture. It is thoroughly debasing and destructive to both the victim and the torturer. No circumstances justify its use, and its absolute prohibition under international human rights law must be defended.

The reported torture of American POWs, with its echoes of the Korean War experience, is deeply depressing. It is also depressing to read the reaction of some, who while ready to justifiably condemn the horrific tortures of so many "free world" countries, immediately reject its possibility in North Vietnam without any apparent examination of the evidence.

It helps no one to make proof of torture a partisan question. This practice must be condemned wherever it is used, and to determine whether or not it has been used should be the subject of rational and responsible inquiry.

This American family can appreciate and respect reporters like Anthony Lewis. We need honest reporters who have the guts to really say something about "man's inhumanity to man" in Vietnam and elsewhere in this world. My eight-year-old son read the article "Whom Americans Welcome" (IHT, April 1). He wanted to know what were genitals? What was lye, international relations? Well he got the picture. What does the welcoming committee for Nguyen Van Thieu need—a coloring book?

Leader Says Terms Are 'Dead'

Rhodesian Africans Reject Smith Proposals

SALISBURY, April 6 (Reuters). Rhodesia's African National Council—voice of the country's 5 million African majority—today rejected Prime Minister Ian Smith's new move to settle the country's seven-year-old independence dispute with Britain.

The leader of the ANC, Methodist bishop Abel Muzorewa, reaffirmed African nationalist opposition to the constitutional proposals negotiated between Rhodesia and Britain in 1971. Mr. Smith yesterday that these proposals contained the basis of new attempts to break the long deadlock.

The settlement terms—recognition of independence that the country's white rulers unilaterally declared in 1965 but aiming for eventual black rule in the former colony—were "dead," the bishop declared in a statement: "We reject these proposals for all time."

'Opposition Increased'

The bishop, who spearheaded African opposition to the settlement formula when it was put to a test of public acceptability last year, rejected claims by Mr. Smith and his government that Africans were having a change of heart.

Africans continued to reject the proposals, he said. "Their opposition to the proposals has, in fact, increased," he said.

The proposals were pigeonholed by the British a year ago after a commission established that they were not acceptable to the majority of Rhodesians.

Mr. Smith reopened the question yesterday when he told Parliament that he planned to take "positive action" to get a settlement. He did not say what kind of action he planned and British officials in London said they had no knowledge of any formal moves by Mr. Smith to reopen talks.

U.K. Seen Cool to Idea

LONDON, April 6 (UPI).—The British government today gave a cool reception to Mr. Smith's call for a new bid to end the independence quarrel. A Foreign Office spokesman said, "We have no comment on his statement." Other British government sources said there is no question of reopening negotiations with the Smith government at the moment.

British officials said Mr. Smith first would have to make still another effort to reach agreement with Bishop Muzorewa.

Storm of Protest in London

Rhodesia Newsman Gets Hard Labor After Secret Trial

By Alvin Shuster

LONDON, April 6 (NYT).—After a secret trial on undisclosed charges, Peter Niesewand, a 28-year-old Rhodesian journalist, was sentenced by a Salisbury, Rhodesia, court today to two years in prison at hard labor. One year was suspended.

The secrecy surrounding the case and the severity of the sentence touched off a storm of protest here. Members of Parliament, journalists and others condemned the Rhodesian regime and called on the British government to intervene. The Foreign Office called the case "regrettable."

The difficulties of Mr. Niesewand, a Rhodesian citizen born in South Africa, have been closely watched in London because his reports have served as one of the most important links with the breakaway regime, which declared itself independent of Britain seven years ago. He worked for the British Broadcasting Corporation, the Guardian, Reuters and other news agencies and newspapers.

Since Feb. 20, the freelance journalist has been detained in solitary confinement. The Rhodesian government has remained silent on the charges, except to say they were brought under the country's Official Secrets Act.

Reporters, who were barred from the brief trial last month, were also kept from the courtroom today for the verdict and sentence. A court official said only that Mr. Niesewand had been found guilty and sentenced to two years at hard labor, with one year suspended because the reporter had "acted openly and not in secret."

It is generally believed here and in Salisbury that the charges stemmed from his reports that guerrillas were operating in northeast Rhodesia from the Portuguese territory of Mozambique. He has refused to reveal sources of information on which parts of the reports of the guerrilla activities were based.

The reaction here was intense, with the sharpest words from Harold Wilson, leader of the Labor party opposition, who called Rhodesia a country operating under a "system of organized thuggery." He said the trial was "staged for the purpose of intimidating any other journalist who seeks to find and print the truth about Rhodesia."

The National Union of Journalists here called the sentence "bloody diabolical" and the Guardian said it was "unbelievably savage—the more so since no details of the charges against him—let alone the evidence—have been given in public." A spokesman for the BBC described the case as "intolerable" and said, "We retain our full confidence in Peter as our man in Salisbury."

Although Foreign Office officials said they were waiting for clarification, it was clear by the reaction that many members of Parliament wanted no new talks with Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith until Mr. Niesewand was released. There were demands that the Foreign Office lodge a strong protest with Salisbury over the case.

"The tainted conviction of this journalist makes a mockery of any fresh effort by Mr. Smith to reach a settlement," said James Callaghan, who speaks for the Labor party on foreign affairs.

THEATER

In London—Staging A Battle of the Sexes

By John Walker

LONDON, April 6 (IHT).—Colin Welland is a much-admired television playwright whose much-admired television play, "Say Goodnight to Grandma," has now been transferred to the stage of the St. Martin's Theatre. There is still much to admire about this entertaining play, particularly the way that the author has shaped a domestic comedy with a farcical joke figure, a mother-in-law, at its center into something altogether sharper and wittier.

But, on stage, the play's flaws —its inconsistency of tone, its final roller-coaster ride from comedy to farce to tragedy—seem more intrusive. It is a battle of the sexes—young woman against older wife against mother-in-law—for the possession of Tony, son and husband, fought in the no-man's-land of kitchen and living room. The mother, a widow, regards her daughter-in-law as an interloper and tries to preserve her son in an eternal adolescence so that she, too, can retain her own youth.

Jean, the wife, is so determined to break her mother-in-law's dominance that, finally, she willingly destroys her husband to achieve her end. Both women's motives spring from the same atavistic maternalism. The wife wants her husband mainly as a means of financial support for her and her newly-born child. To both, he is little more than some sort of sex object.

It is the stuff of domestic tragedy. Mr. Welland has chosen to treat it as comedy and very funny he is, too. A tea party crackles with bitchy dialogue as casually brutal insults are genteelly delivered. The play's set piece, a reunion of Tony's old rugby-playing friends, now balding and with bulging beer bellies, trying to recreate their bawdy, carefree youth, is both hilarious and sad and provides the ideal setting for the final confrontation.

The author himself plays Tony in an affable manner that masks the character's inconsistency—the weak snivelling creature at the end bears little resemblance to the robust figure in the opening scenes.

As his mother, Madge Ryan is brilliantly venomous without seeming to be, and Stephanie Turner is perfect as the embattled wife. Patrick Dromgoole's direction is skillful; he manages the play's time shifts well.

* * *

At the Young Vic is another first play: Tom Stoppard's "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead," revived in an excellent production by Bernard Gross. First performed in 1966, the play has quickly achieved classic status and seems destined rarely to be out of modern repertory, which is all to the good, for it is still dazzling in its cleverness and wit.

Mr. Stoppard's gloss on "Hamlet" might have had its starting point in the kind of theatrical anecdote recounted in the Guardian this week by the former actor Sir Gyles Isham. It concerned two bit players in "Othello," who appeared in different acts of the play so that the first would be leaving the theater as the second arrived. After some months of this, the first actor said to the second: "By the way, what happens at the end of the play? She kills the black man, doesn't she?"

In a like manner, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern have little idea of what is happening around them, as they wait endlessly in an anteroom for their brief moment of action. Still unsure of exactly who they are, Andrew Robertson and Nicky Henson turn the characters into a sort of Laurel and Hardy combination, the one small and quick, the other heavy and slow, but both bewildered as they are involved in great events that they do not understand and forced into roles that they find as meaningless as their ordinary existence when they sit and wait for the next call to come.

They are admirably supported by Gavin Reed's sinister Player and I would have liked to have seen more of Mel Martin's Ophelia, Hugh Hastings's Polonius, and Ian Charleston's Hamlet. The play, providing you know your Shakespeare, is quite admirable in the way it elaborates into a full-length comedy one of Shakespeare's minor jokes—of the irrelevance and interchangeability of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern —and has turned two tiny characters into modern figures, suffering existential predicaments as profound as those that plagued Hamlet.

In Paris—A Ziegfeld Lesson

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

PARIS, April 6 (IHT).—Pierre Etaix, the screen comedian of platinum-plated savoir-faire in the Max Linder tradition, is the star of "A Quoi On Joue?," an intimate revue that Jean Desailly and Simone Valère are presenting at the Théâtre Hébertot. It is a miniature spectacle, an exhilarating romp that practices the wise Ziegfeld formula: "Never give an audience quite enough." Not that this witty little show cheats, far from it. Played without intermission (a welcome innovation), it fulfills the prescribed time schedule, running from 9 to 11. It entertains generously and engagingly, but one comes away wishing there were more of it.

This merry league of lively notions plays mockingly with all theatrical forms: circus and opera, movies and television, and slapstick and song-and-dance.

A sample of its flavor is the presentation of "Faust" which is interrupted when the tenor loses his voice. "Is there a doctor, aside from Dr. Faustus, in the house?" inquires the stuttering, worried prompter. Etaix, in white tie, tails, opera cloak and topper, rises in the stalls and volunteers. "I'm Dr. Jekyll," he announces and, taking the stage, proceeds to demonstrate that he is. His squirming metamorphosis recalls the good old days when actors instead of gabbling about split personalities illustrated what they were. Coming on in frock coats, Ascot ties and all they implied, they then instantaneously—with a quick makeup change (the fright wig and carnivorous fangs were conveniently attached to the back of a handy chair)—transformed themselves into a combination of Quasimodo and an exalted evangelist demanding the restoration of capital punishment. The lightning-flash transition was fun then and it is fun now.

Annie Fratellini of the celebrated clown family is Etaix's able partner. A mistress of every musical instrument, she displays the virtuosity of her accomplishments and warbles sweetly of the vanished Paris of Mimi and Louise against a background in which skyscrapers, puffing factories and superhighways are obscuring the sight of Notre Dame, the Arch of Triumph and the Eiffel Tower. There is bitter nostalgia in the blown-up photos of the destruction of the quaint Cirque Médrano, which has been demolished to make way for yet another garage. The building boom that is rendering the City of Light indistinguishable from Detroit is satirized in the finale as the company bores through the platform and disappears from view.

Etaix discards his dress suit for the saw-ring motley as the red-nosed, baggy-trousered foil to Miss Fratellini's circus princess. Christian Marin—of horsey mien and sinister stalk—provokes mirth with his every move, whether standing in for Mephistopheles, dominating as a tyrannical cop or dodging on and off a TV set.

Pierre Etaix
..."A Quoi On Joue?"

The ingenious decor and staging of "A Quoi On Joue?" is as clever as its material and its principal players. Here is a delicious divertissement for all.

* * *

Curious chance, perhaps, the inclusion of the word "egg" in a title has usually spelled success. Marceau's comedy, "The Egg," Sherwood Anderson's short story, "The Triumph of an Egg" —and his dramatization of that story—John Masefield's "Eggs and Baker," Thomas Beer's collection of tales, "Mrs. Egg and Other Barbarians," Betty MacDonald's "The Egg and I"—as a book, as a movie and as a television serial—Simenon's "The Story of an Egg" and George Kaufman's farce about show business, "The Butter-and-Egg Man" were all hits. Until the other evening only one exception could be cited: "The Egghead," a dismal Broadway flop by Molly Kazan.

The theory that "egg" might bring good luck was cracked once and for all when a group of young Americans, taking over the rococo Théâtre Ranelagh, performed on its gilt-framed stage something called "Eggs."

This sorry attempt to amuse was a nonsense play evidently inspired by the situation of Ionesco's "Amédée" in which a dreary couple similarly find that an impossible object has blossomed in their bedchamber, in this case, an enormous red egg that threatens to explode. In addition to this worry, their home is invaded by sassy military personnel and pushy hippies. What is intended, one supposes, is another absurd fantasy sending up the American Dream. In hopes of making a splash, the exchanges have been peppered with four-letter words, but as everyone—including every old maid alive—has probably heard them all by now, this shock treatment no longer works.

Instead of sprinkling feeble surrealistic experiments with a now tired vocabulary, daring beginners would do better to get some shockers off the library shelf. For almost three centuries the Earl of Rochester's satirical fantasy—far more extravagant in its reckless fantastical flights than "Eggs"—was a legend. Not long ago the manuscript was discovered and it was published by the Olympia Press. Apparently a savage caricature of Charles II's court, it is twice as dirty as "Eggs" and twice as foul-mouthed, but it does have some literary value. If an ambitious company is out to grab attention, let it try its hand at its performance.

* * *

Andrew de Groat of the Byrd Hoffman School, which performs in the Bob Wilson production, offered a solo dance recital at the Théâtre Récamier on Monday evening. Mr. Wilson, who evidently had a hand in its choreography, came to Paris to attend. For an hour and a half De Groat whirled gracefully and assumed poses on a dimly lit stage as Alain Lloyd provided a concert of Bach, Scarlatti and others, including compositions of his own, on the piano. This soothing performance cast a magic mood that Wilson evokes in his stage pictures.

Wilson is returning to New York to expand his spectacle, "Deafman's Glance," seen here to great success two seasons ago. It originally consisted of five acts, each lasting an hour, and its scenario was the fruit of Wilson's collaboration with a deaf-mute who was able to draw and suggested his ideas by sketches. The revised version will include prologues to each act, one being written by Jerome Robbins, and the presentation will last seven hours. Mr. Wilson intends to bring the extended edition to Paris late in the year.

LYCEE DES NATIONS INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL
1293 - BELLEVUE/GENEVA
Member of International Schools Association, European Council of International Schools, Geneva Region International Education Council.
This International School of some 300 students aged 3-19 invites applications from teachers with appropriate qualifications for the following posts which will be vacant from 1st September 1973.
Primary Section: 1) Infants; 2) Lower Juniors; 3) Upper Juniors.
Interest in mathematics junior science or music may be an added recommendation. This is a vital, forward-looking primary school working along "integrated-day" lines. Candidates should have a minimum of two years' successful experience after qualifying.
Secondary Section:
Specialist teachers are required in the following areas of the curriculum:
1) English; 2) History; 3) Modern Languages (German with French); 4) Biology with Mathematics; 5) Mathematics and Technical subjects; 6) Physical Education; 7) Geography.
Candidates offering any combination of the above would receive serious consideration. Experience in middle school integrated studies would be particularly valuable. It is hoped that one or more of the successful candidates will have an interest in audio-visual aids and display, English as a foreign language or in some area supporting the academic programme. Strong extra-curricular interests and willingness to share these with our students would be an added recommendation. The work is both stimulating and demanding and only those with dedication and enthusiasm should apply. Considerable freedom is allowed to staff within their area of the curriculum to develop an effective programme. The school participates in the International Baccalaureate programme to which it is deeply committed. Applicants must be well qualified and experienced in teaching to University Entrance Level.
Please write fully in the first instance to the Director at the School, naming three referees. Contracts will initially be for two years. Removal and repatriation allowances.

LOS TRES CABALLOS TORREMOLINOS
International Hotel Inauguration
Next May 12 the Hotel Principe Ottomen will be inaugurated in Torremolinos. This Hotel belongs to the chain "L.T.C. International." Its capacity of 1,200 beds makes it one of the largest in the country.
The official inauguration will be presided over by the Minister of Information and Tourism, Mr. Alfredo Sanchez Bella, who will deliver a short speach for the solemn opening, as well as Prince Nader Bayzid of the Ottoman dynasty, President of the Board of Directors of the "L.T.C. International."
Three months ago the daily "El Alcazar" of Madrid gave Dr. Bayzid an important award for his great international tourist activity and for the importance of his investments in hostelry. Tonight, during a dinner presided over by the Minister of Information and Tourism, Mr. Alfredo Sanchez Bella, the English language newspaper "Iberian Daily Sun" will present their "Golden Sun" awards in the Hotel Mindanao of Madrid.
The "Golden Sun" award is a much appreciated and prestigious trophy because each year it is presented to only 7 foreign and Spanish personalities.
The awards are to go to President of the Cortes (Spanish Parliament), Don Alejandro Rodriguez de Valcarcel; poet Robert Graves, who lives on the island of Majorca; Spanish film set designer Gil Parrondo, who has two Oscars; Dona Maria del Carmen Martinez Bordiu-Franco, Duquesa de Cadiz, who is General Franco's granddaughter; Don Carlos Arias Navarro, the Mayor of Madrid; British press magnate Lord Thompson; and Prince Nader Bayzid, one of the big promotors on the Costa del Sol.
Last year's award was designed by artist Joan Miro, and immediately after the presentation, Spanish sculptor Eduardo Chillida was invited to design this year's award, an invitation which he accepted.
The winners of the awards were chosen by a jury comprised of the Director General of Tourism Promotion, Don Esteban Bassols; Director General of Posts and Telecommunications, Don Leon Herrera; journalists Martin Ferrand and Manuel Alcala; Dr. Cervantes, and Don Pedro Serra, the "Sun" Director.
The awards go to those who have done most to promote the image of Spain abroad.

Henry Lamb, New Grafton Gallery, 1a Grafton St., London W1, to April 26.

Henry Lamb (1883-1960) was a quintessential English painter—precise, subdued and incisive—whose public reputation has rested on two or three famous works, notably the large portrait of Lytton Strachey. But, as this retrospective shows, he was an extremely versatile and able painter in a number of different directions—still life, landscape, war pieces, portraitures and an excellent draftsman in addition.

Paris

Muchir, Galerie 9, 9 Rue des Beaux-Arts, Paris 6, to April 14.

Red, white and blue enamel color (no suggestion of a patriotic allusion) buttered broadly and soberly across a charcoal ground and the width of the canvas make these elegant and visually uncomplicated paintings a pleasant sight. As a batch, they are repetitious but they seem to be devoid of the rather claustrophobic intellectual aestheticism one might expect from such a description.

Brion Gysin, Galerie Weiller, 5 Rue Gît-le-Coeur, Paris 6, to April 20.

American artist Brion Gysin was excommunicated by André Breton in 1938, the sort of thing that happened to a number of other deserving artists who crossed the irascible pope. Contact with Japanese and Arab writing, during the war and after and with the desert of North Africa deeply affected the more recent work of this artist here on display. Impressionistically calligraphic desert views are followed by further calligraphies that are not without kinship to Marc Tobey's manner, and finally by calligraphic permutations, sometimes sensitively handsome, sometimes repetitious.

Plossu and Whealton, Centre Culturel Américain, 3 Rue du Dragon, Paris 6, to April 20.

Plossu's black and white photo exhibition is titled the "Phantom West" and is devoted to American ghost towns. Sometimes sober and stilted in the manner of the photography of the period when these towns bloomed. Whealton's work is in color—called photographic painting, very repetitious variations on what looks like a microscopic view of living cells shown in various colors. Maybe of technical interest, hard to tell.

Salon des Artistes Indépendants, Grand Palais, Paris 8, Main entrance, to April 10.

The Salon des Indépendants made a lot of sense when academism ruled (see "Equivoques" at the Arts Décoratifs) and it was the only place where anyone could show and there was no selection committee. But this no longer holds true. This year like last year there are 5,000 paintings and sculptures—most of them distressingly inane. The artists are all pretty well able to do what they have decided to do. Unfortunately what they chose is lacking in interest. Some exceptions, of course. A painter like Zeller, for instance, who uses an intentionally corny visual language to express a poetic content. There is also a retrospective show of artists who showed at the Indépendants between 1913 and 1930. Many with their pigeonhole in art history. An amusing Van Dongen among other things.

Tamara Hubert, La Galerie, 67 Rue St. André-des-Arts, Paris 6, to April 14.

Pastel on cut-out paper assemblies representing two-headed portraits and other subjects show considerable facility, a lot of know-how, a feeling for the patterns inherent to a subject (the repetitive human figures in a couple of works titled "Vietnam"). The style tends to crowd into the foreground at the expense of expression which has not yet found its unifying factor.

French Experts Decode Writing On Darius Statue

TEHRAN, April 6 (AP).—A headless statue of the Persian ruler Darius the Great found in the southwest of Iran last Christmas was built by the Egyptians and shipped to Persia around 500 BC, experts from the Louvre in Paris said yesterday.

After deciphering writing on the statue, the experts said that it was built by the Egyptians to thank their Persian rulers for the work they had done in building a canal between the Red Sea and the Nile.

One inscription on the statue says: "Here is the statue of stone that Darius the king ordered to be made in Egypt so that whoever would see it in the future would know that Persian man conquered Egypt."

The statue represents Darius in Persian attire with a dagger in his belt. But the style is that of Egyptian statues.

There are 10 inscriptions on the statue, in Egyptian, ancient Persian, Alamite and Babylonian. Iranian and French archaeologists consider the statue to be one of the most important finds of the ancient Persian empire.

Paris Operetta

Henri Christiné's operetta "Phi-Phi," in a staging by Louis Ducreux and designed by Denis Martin, will open April 8 at the Théâtre de la Musique (Gaîté-Lyrique) in Paris. The cast includes Hélia T'Hézan, Jean Giraudeau and Jean-Christophe Benoît. Richard Blareau will conduct, and the choreography will be by Joseph Lazzini.

19th-Century Idiosyncrasies in Porcelain

THE ART MARKET

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, April 6 (IHT).—In the so-called "decorative" or "minor" arts, every now and again an artist comes along whose work sums up to near perfection the spirit of his time. Jacob Petit, the 19th-century French ceramist, was such a man.

His gaudy porcelain figures epitomize the conventional art of his time—the pictorial expression of which may be seen at the current exhibition at the Musée des Arts Décoratifs in Paris.

But, the porcelain objects, apparently, do not hold the same appeal to buyers as the paintings, which collectors see as kitsch (e.g. bad=good). A small but, in its own way, very good selection of Petit's work was auctioned Monday by Georges Villias at the Hôtel Drouot in Paris—along with other porcelain objects. The prices were far from startling.

Career

Jacob Petit's personal life is something of a mystery. He was born in 1796 and is known to have been one of Gros's pupils—the latter probably the most admired painter in the 1820s and 1830s. Petit appears to have traveled extensively in Europe. Certain details in his work suggest that he went to Algeria as well. An Algerian rider, leaping over a clock embedded in rocks (auctioned Monday), stands in stirrups that might have been modeled by a scholar specializing in Islamic metalwork—if scholars knew how to model. Nothing more is known of Petit's personal life—not even the date of his death.

Professionally, he is better known. He worked for some years at the royal factory at Sèvres and set up a small workshop at Bellevue. In 1830, with his brother, he bought Mardocée, a factory at Fontainebleau. In 1862, he sold it to one of his employees, a Mr. Jacquemin. The latter acquired the molds, the plaster or clay models of Petit's figures and the right to use the master's mark. This apparently minor detail accounts in part for the lack of financial enthusiasm among collectors for Petit's work—it makes it extremely difficult to differentiate between works from the hand of Jacob Petit and those made later by his successors.

After Jacquemin, there were others working on into the early 20th century—all of them entitled to use the initials "J.P." painted in underglaze blue or stamped under the glaze, on the bottom of cups, bowls and molded figures. On the other hand, Jacquemin, used his own mark: four crossed swords. To complicate the matter further, Petit himself continued to make porcelain after he settled in Paris in 1863. It is a moot question whether he used a new mark.

Whether or not from the master's hand, all "J.P.s" bear the unmistakable stamp of a well-defined taste. Petit appears to have worked in the same manner as a frustrated sculptor and painter—rather than as a contented potter. His production of figurines and heavily-carved decorative pieces exceeds that of any other potter or porcelain maker. His interest in pure shape such as a simple cup or bowl was minimal, so minimal that he may have had some of his wares made at the Limoges factory, confining himself to the role of decoration before final firing. A work combining sculpture and painting was his idea of pottery at its greatest and no piece illustrates this better than the big clock in the Monday sale.

The clock, in fact, was a pretext. The circular mechanism has been shoved into a rockery, all but hidden in the surrounding flamboyant composition. The piece is set on a base molded in the fashion of a Renaissance pedestal, covered with foliage and flowers. The Algerian rider mounted on a rearing stallion is about to jump over the clock. Petit spared no effort to make the rider colorful, from gilded stirrups to polychrome turban. In his zeal, he got a bit confused over the scimitar, which is held the wrong way. Remembering his training under Gros, he painted two miniature scenes on the front of the pedestal within "Oriental" frames—scenes inspired by 19th-century bookbindings of Turkish or North African design. In both scenes, an Algerian rider on a white horse is fighting a French officer. Clouds of pink dust rise in the distance. In the background dim forms, in a uniform brown, strikingly modern and unacademic for their time, suggest that Petit was perhaps not a bad painter. The price for this large piece was 3,480 francs and shows that buyers are not taking Petit very seriously. An 18th-century porcelain of comparable importance would be worth four times as much.

Speculative Failure

Works by Petit represent, in fact, the failure of a certain type of speculation. In the 1950s, far-sighted people who were dabbling in the yet-unexplored 19th-century objets d'art were betting on Petit as they were on opalines of the Charles X period and Louis-Philippe animalier bronzes. In fact, it was thought that Petit's works, which are gay and colorful, stood a far better chance than the maroon-mustardy figures of stags and hunters by Mène and the other bronze-makers. But the speculators' hopes were dashed. In September, 1952, Connaissance des Arts, the French art magazine, ran an article on Petit with illustrations of a coffee service (pot, bowl and cup), which was estimated to be worth 60,000 old francs (roughly $120). It would probably fetch twice that today. But with devaluation, this means that there has been hardly any appreciation in value. A tea set (cups, pot, sugar bowl), unsigned but very much in Petit's manner—could it be of the post-1863 era?—was knocked down Monday for 2,400 francs. A pair of romantic figures—long-haired men dressed in Italianate peasant costumes, always an art auction favorite—sold for 2,300 francs. A very fine mantelpiece set of clock and two matching vases with elaborately carved foliage fetched a mere 2,900 francs.

None of these prices is particularly low by current market trends. As far as Petit works go, they were rather expensive. Yet prices are still relatively lower than those for paintings of similar inspiration. Perhaps it's time for the auctioneers to tout these sorts of porcelain objects as kitsch. Perhaps then the sky would be the limit.

In his speech last night, the commissioner noted that President Nixon had improved U.S. relations with ex-enemies China and Russia. He said he expected the administration "to do all that lies in its considerable power to reach agreement on the much lesser problems that have arisen between the United States and its long-established friends and allies in Europe.

"We in Europe," he added, "must work with equal dedication toward the same goal."

Farm Prices Rejected

LUXEMBOURG, April 6 (Reuters).—The European Parliament early today failed to agree on the Common Market Commission's farm price proposals for the coming year and in an unprecedented move sent it back to committee for further discussion.

The decision followed a vote in which the nine-nation assembly narrowly rejected a key passage in a resolution which generally approved the commission's price package, envisaging an across-the-board price increase of 2.75 percent.

Farmers Ask 7.5% Rise

BRUSSELS, April 6 (AP).—Common Market farmers today repeated that the commission's farm price proposals are totally inadequate and asked for an average 7.5 percent increase.

About 300 farmers met in Brussels today and voted a resolution asking for the higher price increase.

Jobless Rate Stays About Same in U.S.

Essentially Unchanged At 5 Percent in March

By Peter Milius

WASHINGTON, April 6 (WP).—The nation's unemployment rate remained last month about where it has been since November, the Labor Department said today. The figure fell from 5.1 to 5 percent, and the department described it as "essentially unchanged."

The expanding economy continued to generate new jobs, as it has for many months, but the number of people seeking jobs—the work force—also grew, and the result was a standoff.

For the full first quarter, the unemployment rate was 5 percent, the lowest it has been since the second quarter of 1970. On a quarterly basis, the unemployment figures have steadily improved. The average was 5.8 percent in the first quarter of 1972, and 5.3 percent in the last.

Wages Rise

The Labor Department said the average workingman's hourly wages, as measured by its hourly earnings index, rose 0.4 percent for the month, and were up 5.6 percent over March, 1972.

That means wages have stayed broadly within government guidelines—5.5 percent a year. Labor economists pointed to the hourly earnings index as proof that it is not wages that are driving up prices across the economy.

In a separate report today, the department also said unit labor costs in manufacturing—wages per item produced—rose less in percentage terms in the United States last year than in Japan, Western Europe or Canada. Output per man-hour rose faster in most of the other industrialized countries, but so did hourly pay.

The purchasing power of the average workingman's hourly pay last month was 1.7 percent higher than a year before. That figure has fallen in recent months, another indication that wages have not been keeping up with prices.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Russia to Export Autos to U.S.

The Soviet Union will begin exporting a subcompact car called the Lada to the United States in 1975. Soviet officials say it will be priced at, or slightly below, the level of other economy imports, currently selling in the $2,500 range. The car, said to be the most popular model in Russia, will be imported by Satra Motors, a unit of Satra Corp., a U.S.-based trading company that specializes in Russian and East European trade. Though it is not due to go on sale for almost two years, the Lada will be displayed at the international automobile show in New York this month so that Satra and Russian auto officials can sample the reaction of U.S. car buyers.

Union Bank Buys Share in Saurer

Union Bank of Switzerland has bought an important minority interest in Adolph Saurer of Arbon, Switzerland. The transaction, approved by the Saurer board, became necessary to prevent a group of enterprises from taking a significant interest in the utility-vehicle and textile-machine producing company, Union Bank says. The bank plans to sell its Saurer stocks in due time to Swiss holders.

Rothschild in Shipbuilding Venture

Geothermal Resources International, of the United States, has completed a financing and leasing transaction in a venture with N.M. Rothschild, of Britain, for construction of merchant vessels for an international shipping company. Geothermal declines to disclose the number of ships to be built or the identity of the shipper, but it says construction costs will total about $150 million. The company says it and Rothschild have received part of a front-end fee as co-managers in arranging the transaction and will receive the balance of the fee in installments at the laying of the keels and upon delivery of each vessel, to begin in December, 1974. A new company, New Court Leasing Ltd., jointly owned by Geothermal and Rothschild, will receive a management fee each quarter for the life of each 15-year lease. In addition, each vessel will be owned by a separate company, which will lease the ship to the shipping company. Geothermal and Rothschild will each own 25 percent of the shares of each vessel-owner company, with the remainder owned by a private group.

Consortium to Seek Colombian Oil

Five U.S., French and Japanese companies have agreed to explore oil reserves in Colombia, the Japanese partner, Fuyo Petroleum Development, reports. The group is likely to sign a contract with Ecopetrol, a state-controlled Colombian oil-producing corporation, for oil concessions. Fuyo says City Investing, of the United States, will take a 25 percent interest in the project, Total Exploration (affiliated with Cie. Française des Pétroles) 25 percent, Cayman, of the United States 25 percent, and Reserve Oil & Gas, of the United States and the Japanese firm 12.5 percent each. The exploration area is located in the Putumayo region, southern Colombia.

U.S. Firm in Japan Venture

Weyerhaeuser, of the United States, has reached an agreement with Mitsui & Co. and Jujo Paper Co., of Japan, to form a joint newsprint manufacturing company. The company will market newsprint principally in Japan. Weyerhaeuser says that the plan calls for the establishment of Jujo-Weyerhaeuser Co. this year with Jujo having the majority ownership. Weyerhaeuser says the companies also plan to establish a newsprint center in the United States.

U.S. Money Supply Growth Is Still Slowing, Fed Says

By John H. Allan

NEW YORK, April 6 (NYT).—Growth in the nation's money supply is continuing to slow, the Federal Reserve System disclosed yesterday.

This deceleration, some monetary analysts suggested, is evidence that the Fed's announced policy of tighter money and credit is starting to show results.

The total dollar value of most checking account balances plus currency in the hands of the public averaged $256 billion in the week ended March 28, down from $257.4 billion a week earlier.

More significant than the money-supply figure itself was its growth rate, analysts said. For the four weeks ended March 28, the money supply expanded 2.2 percent from the preceding quarter and 6.4 percent from the preceding year. Both rates are well below the money-supply growth rates evident earlier this year.

Business-loan demand continues strong, and interest rates are continuing to move upward, the Fed reported.

Large banks in New York City, which a week ago reported their first drop in business loans this year, showed a $169-million increase this week in commercial and industrial loans.

Nationally, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, business loans of all large banks totaled $101.9 billion on March 28, up from $101.4 billion a week earlier and from $85.6 billion a year earlier.

Consumer Prices Rise In Italy in February

ROME, April 6 (AP-DJ).—The Italian general price index for consumer goods rose 1.2 percent in February from January and 8.8 percent from February 1972, the government said today.

The wholesale index rose 1.7 percent from January, leading the Statistics Bureau to warn that there would likely be continued increases in the prices of consumer goods. The rise from February 1972 was not published due to statistical difficulties in the Jan. 1 application of the value-added tax.

Swiss Living Costs Up

BERN, April 6 (AP-DJ).—The official Swiss cost-of-living index rose 0.8 percent in March, bringing the 12-month increase to 8.2 percent, the federal agency for industry, business and labor said today. The rise was attributed to increasing costs of food, clothing, household equipment and cosmetics.

U.S. Firms Buy Own Stock As Prices Drop on Wall St.

By Vartanig G. Vartan

NEW YORK, April 6 (NYT).—The unprecedented rush by corporations to acquire their own shares picked up momentum in the closing days of March and was continuing strong so far in April.

These companies are attracted by the relatively low prices for their stocks in the wake of a prolonged market decline and, as one officer expressed it, "find the purchase of their own shares a most advantageous investment."

Typically, the shares are placed in corporate treasuries and used for stock option programs, employee purchase plans, conversion of securities and other corporate purposes.

Merrill Lynch disclosed yesterday it has compiled a list of 140 companies that announced stock repurchase programs during the first quarter of 1973. It estimated the total value of shares under these programs at $1.1 billion, which is a record for any three-month period.

Corporate buy-back programs have become a characteristic of bear markets during the last decade. Such programs flourished in 1966 and again in 1969-1970, but never has Wall Street seen anything like the recent rush.

At the same time, the repurchase programs, whereby companies buy their own shares in the open market and in large-block trades from various sellers, provide a welcome source of equity demand during a period of slumping stock prices and trading volume.

A total of 45 repurchase programs was announced in the final ten days of March, according to a study compiled by Harry A. Ikenson, an analyst at Reynolds Securities.

According to his tally, this meant that a record monthly number of 113 corporations announced such plans for all of March. There were 68 announced in the first three weeks of last month. In February, 24 companies disclosed buy-back programs.

N.Y. Downtrend Ended But Trading Is Slow

By Terry Robards

NEW YORK, April 6 (NYT).—The stock market rebounded in slow trading today after five consecutive sessions of declining prices on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones industrial average climbed 7.61 and closed at 931.07, slightly beneath its best level of the day. Other market indicators also gained ground, indicating that the trend was decisively up for a change.

Volume rose to 13.89 million shares from yesterday's 12.75 million, but remained below normal for the year so far. Nevertheless, the upswing — which occurred while the market was scoring some of its best gains—was encouraging to analysts who had been awaiting a rally.

Whether the rally was mainly technical and occurred merely because the market was tired of sliding, or whether it represented a substantive change in investor sentiment, remained to be seen. But there was little encouragement in the news background.

Leasco Active

Leasco preferred stock made an unusual appearance near the top of the active list, climbing 1 1/4 to 27 on turnover of 272,300 shares. Leasco common fell 1 3/4 to 9 1/8. Its loss of 16.1 percent was the largest on the exchange in percentage terms.

The company disclosed plans for an exchange offer, whereby units composed of one share of a new nonconvertible preferred stock with a redemption value of $28, plus one-half share of common stock, would be exchanged for each share of the present convertible preferred.

In a clarifying statement, the company said the purpose of the offer would be to reduce the common and common-equivalent shares by about 3.68 million if the offer is 100 percent successful, as well as to reduce the total redemption value of all preferred stock from about $197 million to $93 million.

The most active stock of the day was Woolworth, off 5/8 at 21 on total volume of 737,800 shares that included a massive block of 638,400 shares at 20 1/2. Another bundle of 49,900 traded at 20 3/4.

Stocks finished slightly higher in light trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex index edged up 0.01 to 24.06, while advances led declines, 450 to 413. Turnover was 3.66 million shares, up from 3.01 million yesterday.

Narrowing Deficit In U.S.–Japan Trade Reported

WASHINGTON, April 6 (Reuters).—The U.S. trade deficit with Japan is now beginning to narrow, reversing the trend of recent years, according to Japanese and U.S. trade statistics.

Since 1970 the U.S. deficit with Japan has jumped from $1.2 billion to last year's mammoth $4.1 billion.

The deficit was the major component of the largest trade deficit ever recorded by the United States of $6.4 billion in 1972.

The U.S.-Japan Council reports that on the basis of Japanese customs clearance figures the trade gap narrowed in the three months December (1972) to end-February (1973) to an actual $410 million from the previous three months' deficit of $985 million.

U.S. Commerce Department data on the same basis show a similar result, although the figures differ because of the methods of valuation adopted.

Over the same six-month period, the deficit has declined from the $1.157 billion of last September-November to $635 million for the December-February period. Administration officials see further evidence that the gap continued to narrow in March, although figures for the month have not yet been released.

'No Point in Piling Up Another Billion Dollars'

Kuwait Hardening Its 'Bank the Oil' Policy

By Jim Hoagland

KUWAIT, April 6 (WP).—While other Middle East oil producers are planning to cash in on the energy crisis in the West by sharply raising production and beginning to market oil themselves, Kuwait is standing firm on its decision to limit output to current levels.

For Kuwait, the important crisis of the moment is not the one of energy but of currency. The unsettled international monetary situation is strongly influencing Kuwait's strategy of "banking the oil" instead of seeking new revenue from it.

This sparsely-populated desert country, which has been a prolific petroleum producer for four decades, is in the enviable position of being so rich that it cannot reasonably spend or invest even the $1.5 billion that the current 1-billion-barrel annual production brings in. Kuwait's decision to restrict production is not seen here as having a sharp immediate impact on the industrialized world's intensive hunt for more crude petroleum sources, in view of the doubling of production planned by Saudi Arabia, Iran and Abu Dhabi over this decade.

Concern Voiced

But Kuwait has been lobbying for general production controls in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, and Western diplomats here are beginning to voice concern about other oil producers coming to accept Kuwait's philosophy if international monetary unrest continues.

"Perhaps the West should be more worried about financial pressures on Arab countries to limit production instead of political pressure," mused one diplomat.

With continuing runs on the dollar, "a barrel in the ground is worth much more to us than a barrel on the market now," said Abdulwahab Mohamed, the under-secretary of Kuwait's Foreign Ministry for Finance and Oil.

Another Kuwaiti official who argues that production should be stretched out to take advantage of the higher prices that are expected in the future said: "For Kuwait, there is virtually no point in piling up another billion dollars this year or next. We have built all the roads and hospitals the country can take and investment abroad is too uncertain right now."

While such a judgment might sound out of place coming from almost any other "third world" country, Kuwait has the money to back it up. Kuwait's total foreign assets, including investments abroad, are estimated at around $6 billion. Slightly less than half of the country's 850,000 residents hold Kuwaiti citizenship, and the government will turn about one fourth of its approved operating budget back into reserve funds this year.

At midday in Kuwait City, a flat, rambling, freeway town where $300,000 single-family homes are not uncommon, empty buses dutifully roll through the streets although there are no passengers. Bicycles are also a rarity. Almost everyone seems to have at least one car, or ready access to one. Kuwait, which once supplied a third of all oil shipped out of the Middle East, had been increasing its production by 6 percent annually until last year.

Then the opposition group in parliament raised conservation of Kuwait's only resource as a political issue, asserting that Kuwait's oil reserves would be exhausted in a few decades. Production controls were quickly clamped on to defuse the issue.

Hopes by oil company officials that the controls would fade appear to have fallen sharply with the growing acceptance here of the "bank the oil" strategy.

Australia Says It Uncovered Croatian Plot

SYDNEY, April 6 (Reuters).—Croatian extremists based in Australia planned to carry out a second incursion into Yugoslavia before next July, but the plot was discovered, Lionel Murphy, Australian attorney general, said tonight.

An unsuccessful attempt to infiltrate 19 members of the right-wing Ustashi organization into Yugoslavia was made last June and July, and resulted in strained relations between Yugoslavia and Australia.

Yugoslav Premier Dzemal Bijedic protested at the time that most of the group had been allowed to train and store their weapons in Australia.

Mr. Murphy said a raid had been made on the Melbourne Ustashi headquarters by the Australian Security Intelligence organization on March 16. Mr. Murphy said that investigations revealed that a number of Croatian extremist organizations, including the Ustashi, were operating in Australia.

Soviet Captain Admits Collision With Trawler

BREST, France, April 6 (AP).—The captain of the Soviet freighter stopped by French naval vessels off Brittany acknowledged today that his boat collided with a French fishing trawler. The trawler sank with five men aboard.

Maritime officials said Ivan Zuer, captain of the Juzenny Burg, maintained that he did not know there were men aboard the trawler Dany Gerard and was "terribly upset" when he was told lives had been lost.

Capt. Zuer said the collision took place Wednesday night. Sailors aboard his vessel saw a fishing boat and began a search, but they found no one in the darkness, he told a maritime commissioner.

OUR BODIES, OURSELVES
A Book by and for Women

By the Boston Women's Health Book Collective. Simon & Schuster. 276 pp. Illustrated. $8.95 cloth; $2.95 paper.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

If the dozens of women who collaborated in writing this book are right—and it is really impossible for a man to understand what it is like to be a woman—then I probably shouldn't be reviewing "Our Bodies, Ourselves: A Book by and for Women," by the Boston Women's Health Book Collective. But I am doing so anyway, for several reasons: first, because the book looked useful and I wanted an excuse to read it carefully, and second, because those members of the movement I respect have often argued that women's liberation means men's liberation, and it is an argument I am willing to try on.

Besides, it really doesn't matter whether I like the book or not, because it has already been widely distributed and it is well known. You see, it all began back in the spring of 1969, when a group of women in their late 20s and early 30s (some married, some single) got together in Boston to form a discussion group. Initially, their talks were aimed at solving the "doctor problem" and venting their "frustration and anger" at "those doctors who were condescending, paternalistic, judgmental and noninformative." But gradually the discussions evolved into consciousness-raising sessions, then into medical seminars, and finally into a project to write various papers to be distributed to the women's "sisters."

At first the papers were simply mimeographed and passed around. Then, as demand for them grew, they were printed and bound together in an inexpensive edition published by the New England Free Press. Finally, when demand for the book began to strain the resources of the Free Press, it was decided to publish the book commercially. (Incidentally, the present edition is available "to clinics and other groups providing health-counseling services, at a 70 percent discount," provided 12 or more copies are ordered and "a document verifying health service status" is enclosed.) So the publication of "Our Bodies, Ourselves" is more a response than a stimulus, and it doesn't much matter whether male reviewers like it or not.

But do I like it? you are still wondering. Let me duck the question a moment longer by saying that since the book was written collectively—with, for example, "A Boston gay collective" contributing the chapter on lesbianism, "In Amerika They Call Us Dykes"; and several older women helping out on the chapter covering menopause—it was never expected that everyone would be pleased with all the contents, not even the women who put the book together. "Many women have spoken for themselves in this book," the preface states, "though we in the collective do not agree with all that has been written. Some of us are even uncomfortable with part of the material. We have included it anyway, because we give more weight to accepting that we differ than to our uneasiness."

I don't see how any sensible woman—even an antifeminist one—could fail to be enlightened by the book's lucidly informative chapters on "The Anatomy and Physiology of Reproduction and Sexuality," on nutrition, exercise, venereal disease, child-bearing and postpartum emotional problems; or even by the philosophy that informs them, to wit, that knowledge of one's body is essential to control of one's body, and that control of one's body is essential to living in contemporary America. (As you will see if you read the book, it's a more radical idea than it may sound.) On the other hand, I can imagine that some women—even halfway liberated ones—may not agree with the book's extreme open-mindedness on the questions of birth control and abortion, or its specific conclusion that "it is a myth that the infant will be psychologically damaged unless the mother is always present."

As for me, the male in the ointment: I have my quibbles. The book was written collectively, and collective writing is never very refreshing (the next time I come across the word "crucial," I am going to wear the last of the enamel off my molars). I am still trying to dovetail all the talk about "living less in our heads" and responding "to our feelings" with the book's overriding message that women must know and think about their bodies in order to get control of their lives. (I'm sure there's a way to reconcile these two messages, but trying to find it has me climbing an epistemological wall.)

But I learned a great deal from this book that I did not know before, or had somehow forgotten. And if the authors are correct in their belief that one of the major reasons why men oppress women is because "of the male fear and envy of the generative and sexual powers of women"—and I think they are—why then it will do no harm at all for men to read "Our Bodies, Ourselves" and expend a little rational thought on these powers. Nor will it do much harm for a male to review it.

Rome Bans Traffic To Protect a Statue

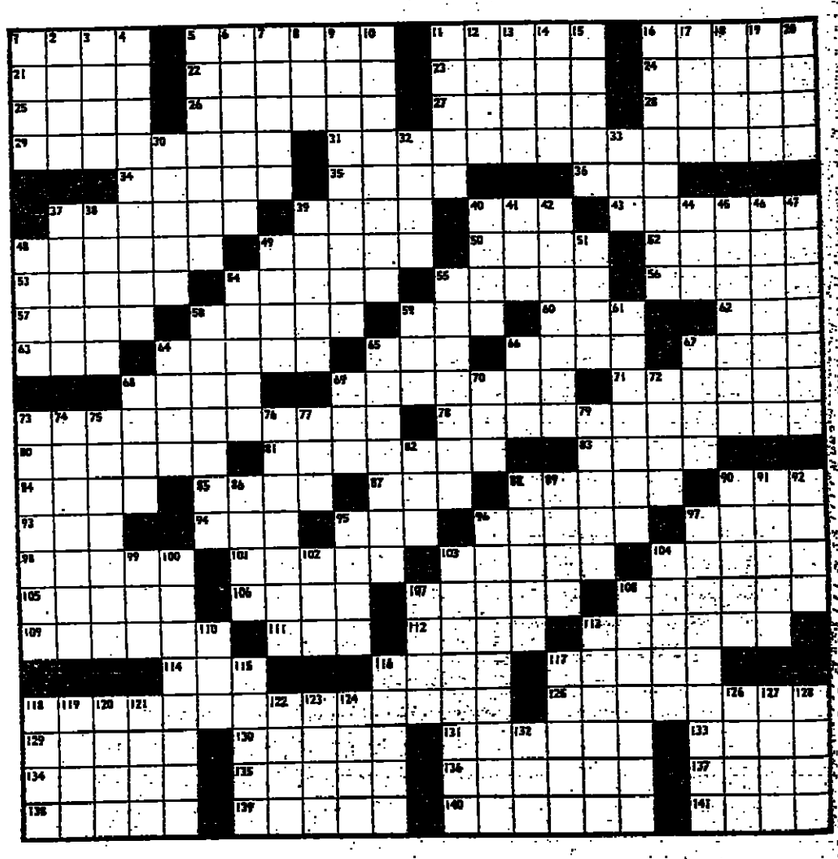

ROME, April 6 (AP).—The Italian government is going to ban automobiles from the Piazza del Campidoglio to protect the 1,800-year-old statue of Emperor Marcus Aurelius.

Education Minister Oscar Scalfaro told the Senate that the government has instructed city officials to ban all motor traffic from the square "to prevent the vibrations caused by motor vehicles from damaging the equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius." Legend has it that when the statue is gone, the end of the world will come.

Beats Brewers, 10-0

Orioles' McNally Opens With Shutout

TIMORE, April 6 (UPI).—baseman Brooks Robinson across four runs with a homers and teammate Don smashed a home run, a and two doubles today as Baltimore backed Dave McNally's three-hit pitching with a 13-hit attack and a 10-0 opening day victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Robinson slugged his first homer in the first inning, a three-run clout, as Baltimore scored four times off Brewers losing pitcher Jim Colborn.

McNally, who retired 12 batters in a row between the second and fifth innings, struck out one batter and walked none.

The Orioles chased Colborn after five innings and tagged reliever Bill Champion with a two-run sixth inning on three singles. Champion left in the seventh inning after Baylor and Robinson smacked back-to-back homers with one out and designated-hitter Terry Crowley and Mark Belanger cracked singles with two out.

Red Sox 15, Yankees 5

In Boston, catcher Carlton Fisk blasted two home runs, including his first major league grand slam for six runs batted in as the Red Sox tagged three New York pitchers for 20 hits, throttling the Yankees, 15-5.

Lost in the wave of Boston hitting were the two designated hitters—Ron Blomberg of the Yankees and Orlando Cepeda of the Red Sox. Blomberg drove in a run when he walked with the bases loaded in the first, and later beat out an infield single. But Cepeda was the only Boston player to go hitless, striking out twice in his six trips to the plate.

Fisk, a rookie of the year in 1972, unloaded a two-run homer to spark a four-run Red Sox uprising in the second inning. He drilled his bases-loaded blast into the Boston bullpen in the fourth inning as the Red Sox moved out to a 12-4 lead.

Mets 3, Phillies 0

Cleon Jones stung Steve Carlton for a pair of homers and Tug McGraw bailed out Tom Seaver with a sharp relief performance to give the Mets a 3-0 victory over Philadelphia at Shea Stadium.

Carlton, the 1972 Cy Young Award winner, and Seaver, the 1969 Cy Young winner, each allowed five hits in their respective stints but Jones made the difference with his two-run homer in the fourth inning and a solo line drive in the seventh that accounted for all the runs in the game.

Seaver lasted 7 2/3 innings before manager Yogi Berra lifted him when he walked Del Unser on a 3-2 pitch to give the Phillies runners on first and third. After McGraw came in, Deron Johnson batted for Willie Montanez and worked the count to 3-2 before fouling out to third. McGraw then blanked the Phillies in the ninth.

Pirates 7, Cardinals 5

In Pittsburgh Gene Clines's two-run pinch-hit triple in the eighth inning gave the defending Eastern Division champion Pirates a 7-5 victory over St. Louis.

The come-from-behind victory delighted a record 51,695 fans who turned out for a special commemorative service for the late Pirate star Roberto Clemente.

Clines, batting for reliever Jim Rooker, slashed a line drive to left center which was dropped by the Cardinals' lunging Lou Brock, permitting Willie Stargell and Rich Habner to race home with the go-ahead runs.

Manny Sanguillen singled with one out to start the Pirates' rally. He moved to third on a single by Al Oliver and Pittsburgh loaded the bases on a walk to Stargell. After Bob Robertson struck out, Hebner, who earlier hit a solo homer, doubled to left, scoring Sanguillen and Oliver and moved the Pirates to within one run of St. Louis and set the stage for Clines's blast.

Clines later scored when Dave Cash reached first on Ray Busse's second error of the game.

Cubs 3, Expos 2

In Chicago, reliever Mike Marshall walked both Randy Hundley and Rick Monday with the bases loaded to force in the tying and winning runs and give the Cubs a 3-2 victory over Montreal.

Expos pitcher Mike Torrez, who took the loss, had the Cubs under control until the ninth and he might have escaped with a victory but for an error by Ron Hunt on a potential double-play ball. Joe Pepitone opened the ninth with a single to center and Cleo James ran for him. Ron Santo grounded to shortstop Tim Foli, who made the throw to second base, but Hunt dropped the ball and both runners were safe.

Ferguson Jenkins, starting the opener for the fifth straight year for the Cubs, yielded both Montreal runs in the first on singles by Hunt, Foli and Ron Fairly and Ken Singleton's sacrifice fly.

Jenkins worked eight innings, giving up five hits, before he was lifted for a pitch-hitter and Bob Locker finished to get the win.

Basketball Team Of UCLA Gets China Invitation

WASHINGTON, April 6 (WP).—A State Department official says that an invitation has been extended to the national collegiate champion UCLA basketball team to tour China sometime in May.

Paul Phillips, public affairs adviser for the cultural affairs bureau, said UCLA officials were attempting to poll the players on the matter, but that the players had been "scattered" because of an academic break.

UCLA athletic director J.D. Morgan said yesterday the decision had not been made yet. "I've got to get the chancellor, the coach and the players together on this," he said. "This is the first day the players have been back."

Morgan said he thought the matter would be concluded one way or the other "later this week."

WHA Aeros Win Against Sharks

HOUSTON, April 6 (UPI).—Larry Hale scored on a slap shot a foot inside the blue line in the first period to start the Houston Aeros to a 7-2 victory over the Los Angeles Sharks in the first round of the Western Division playoffs last night in the World Hockey Association.

Hale's goal began a three-goal spree and the Sharks, who had a 6-3-1 record with Houston in regular season play, never recovered.

SECOND LOOK—Defending Masters champion Jack Nicklaus appears glum after missing a putt at the Augusta, Ga., classic. He carded a second-round 77, well off the pace.

4 Tie for Masters Lead As Nicklaus Falls Back

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 6 (AP).—Gay Brewer, a chain-smoking veteran who lay near death during the Masters Golf Tournament a year ago, swept into a four-way tie for the second-round lead of it today while favored Jack Nicklaus fell out of the running.

Brewer, 41, a graying veteran of 18 years on the pro tour, dominated the par-five holes—he played those four holes five under par—as he came in with a sparkling, six-under-par 66.

That gave him a 36-hole total of 141—three under par on the lush, 6,980-yard Augusta National Golf Club Course—and a tie for the top spot with Bob Dickson, first-round leader Tommy Aaron and J. C. Snead, a nephew of famed Sam Snead.

Snead and Dickson matched 71s in the mild, overcast, almost-windless weather and Aaron had to rally to salvage a 73 and a share of the top spot after his bogey start.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, who chipped in four birdies on the final two holes for a 70, was a stroke behind the bunched-up leaders at 142 and four other players—Grier Jones, Masahi (Jumbo) Ozaki of Japan, former champ Bob Goalby and Britain's Peter Osterhuis—were at 143.

But it was Nicklaus, the defending champion, four-time winner and pre-tournament favorite as usual, who got the most attention as he struggled through one of the most dispirited rounds of his brilliant career to shoot a five-over-par 77.

That, however, still left him within striking distance for a man who has won more money than anyone else in the game. He was at 146, five shots off the pace.

Nicklaus, one of golf's finest putters, started off as if he would make the tournament a runaway when he hit his second shot on the 400-yard first hole within 18 inches of the cup and routinely tapped it in for a birdie.

ABA's Cougars Overpower Nets

NEW YORK, April 6 (UPI).—Billy Cunningham and Joe Caldwell teamed up for 15 points in the fourth period to give the Carolina Cougars a 112-108 victory last night over the New York Nets in an American Basketball Association Eastern Division semifinal playoff game.

The Nets, who led at the end of the first period, 31-25, went cold in the second period as the Cougars outscored them 37-14, to take a 62-45 halftime lead.

The victory gives the Cougars a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Pacers 97, Rockets 95

At Denver, Billy Keller hit a three-point basket with 14 seconds remaining to lead Indiana to a 97-95 victory over the Rockets.

The victory gave the defending ABA champions a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven playoff series. The next game is scheduled in Indiana tomorrow.

Ali's Injury Deception Is Typical of Boxing Game

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, April 6.—Now we are told that Muhammad Ali sprained an ankle a week before Ken Norton slapped him around.

The fighter was supposed to be in New York last night with his trainer, Angelo Dundee, and their friend Dr. Ferdie Pacheco, who worked in the corner in San Diego. They were going to tape a television interview in which they would make some revelation about the Norton bout, which probably meant they would tell about the ankle. However, word arrived that Ali's face still hurt and he had decided not to keep the date.

Meanwhile, the Associated Press carried the report of the injury, quoting Dr. Paul Woodward, team physician for the San Diego Chargers, who said he X-rayed the ankle six days before the match.

It wouldn't be the first time a fighter went into the ring with a physical ailment that he kept secret. When Floyd Patterson tried to regain the heavyweight championship from Ali in Las Vegas in 1965, he concealed a sacroiliac condition until it caught up with him in the ring. Floyd paid for the deception; crippled and defenseless, he suffered almost 45 minutes of calculated punishment before he was reprieved by the referee.

Many Examples

Boxing history offers many more examples. Almost invariably, money is the overriding consideration. The fighter and the men who operate him don't want to pass up a payday. A postponement would mean additional expense for the promoter or mess up the television schedule. In this case, the promoter was a neophyte putting on his first boxing card and the match had to go on a Saturday afternoon because "Wide World of Sports" was carrying it live and picking up part of the tab.

Anyway, the fighter and the men around him always tell themselves, we don't have to be 100 percent to take this bum. As Joe Louis once said: "Oh, I knew if I kept on fighting somebody would come along and take my title. But not tonight. Not this guy."

Nobody ever gives a thought to the gull who is the ultimate victim—the customer who buys his tickets on the tacit promise that both fighters will be ready to give their best, and gets cheated. Taking money under false pretenses is dishonest, of course—Ali's purse was $200,000 and expenses—but fraud has never had an especially bad name in the fight mob.

"Ain't larceny lovely?" the celebrated conman, Wilson Mizner, used to say exultantly to the late Jack Kearns, his partner in mischief whose depredations were to become a golden chapter in boxing history.

There used to be a man-about-the-mob in New York who was known as the honest brakeman because he had never stolen a boxcar. And then there was the definitive statement on morals delivered during World War II by Sam Taub, a statement which, as the years pass, takes on something of the weight of a papal bull.

Capt. Joe Gould, who had managed Jimmy Braddock before signing on to save the world for democracy, was charged with selling off Army materiel and diverting the proceeds to non-military uses.

"He shouldn't have done it," Sammy Taub said, "when there was a war on."

Even if we accept rooking the boxing public as a shining example of the American way, these postfight disclosures of prefight ailments are distasteful because they always have the sound of lame excuses. Considering the source of this one, it seems likely that it is true. Certainly, the Ali whom Norton whipped was a shabby imitation of a handsome young athlete named Cassius Clay.

Doesn't Alter Fact

This doesn't alter the fact that Norton did whip him, or the fact that Ali's sun is setting fast. Less than three months ago, there were guys tearing their pants in their haste to give Ali and Joe Frazier $3 million each for a rematch. At the somewhat rude suggestion of George Foreman, Frazier withdrew as a candidate in January and now Ali has disqualified himself.

Presumably, Jack Kent Cooke, who bankrolled the Frazier-Ali match, still holds a contract for the return bout. The morning after Foreman stopped Frazier, a man was saying that he had been chatting with Cooke a few days earlier.

"He told me," the man said, "that he had given up hope of having the rematch in his Los Angeles building, the Forum. He had decided it would go in June in the Astrodome in Houston."

"What the hell took him so long?" asked Chris Dundee, the Miami Beach promoter. His tone dripped disgust. Chris can't abide amateurs.

South Africa Brings Crisis To Davis Cup Eliminations

By Neil Amdur

NEW YORK, April 6 (NYT).—The worst may be yet to come in the latest Davis Cup crisis over South Africa.

Even if Argentina agrees to play South Africa in their third-round match of the South American zone, only the elimination of South Africa through defeat or default will avoid further political chaos in the competition this year.

The reasons are as follows: The winner of the Argentina-South African series (South Africa would be the heavy favorite regardless of choice of ground) is scheduled to play Chile in Chile during late May.

Chile currently is under a Marxist government, and all Socialist countries have opposed South African participation in international sports. If Chile were to default its match in the sectional final, South Africa then would play the winner of the United States-Mexico match in the American zone final sometime in mid-July.

The United States is a heavy favorite to defeat Mexico in its opening Davis Cup match May 11-13.

United States Lawn Tennis Association officials have expressed concern over the likelihood of a United States-South Africa match. The United States is entitled to choice of ground in the series, since South Africa is entered in the South American section as a "zoneless nation."

But American officials concede privately there is probably no place in the United States where they could hold such a match and that if the series were to be played at all, it would have to be played either in South Africa or at a neutral site.

South Africa was expelled from the Davis Cup in March, 1970, not because of its policy of apartheid, Davis Cup officials have insisted, but because its participation "would have jeopardized the play in the rest of the competition."

Several European nations defaulted matches with South Africa during the competition, while other matches against European rivals were played amid strict security and with political repercussions.

USLTA Names Ralston to Lead Davis Cup Team

NEW YORK, April 6 (NYT).—The United States Lawn Tennis Association has appointed Dennis Ralston of Bakersfield, Calif., as captain and coach of the 1973 United States Davis Cup team. Ralston was the coach and captain in 1972, when the United States defeated Romania, 3-2, for a fifth straight title.

In making the announcement the USLTA Davis Cup chairman, W. Harcourt Woods, said: "Under trying conditions last year, he was a credit to his country and all of tennis. We can look forward to another top effort in 1973."

Ralston, 30, remarked: "I am honored to be selected a second time. I hope that we will have the same great following we had last year, and that the U.S. will be able to keep the cup."

With the exception of 1967, Ralston has been associated with United States Davis Cup teams every year since 1960. As a player from 1960 to 1966, he compiled a 25-9 won-lost record.

Bucks Leading In NBA Playoffs

OAKLAND, April 6 (UPI).—Oscar Robertson, hitting 10 shots in a row in the second half, scored 34 points last night to lead Milwaukee to a 113-93 victory over Golden State and give the Bucks a 2-1 advantage in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

Robertson scored 18 points in the first two periods and the Bucks had a 47-38 halftime lead.

With the score tied, 18-18, and 53 seconds remaining in the opening period, Robertson scored the Bucks' next nine points to give Milwaukee a 27-21 lead two minutes into the second period.

The teams will play the fourth game of their best-of-seven series tomorrow night at the Coliseum arena.

Smith Impressive In WCT Victory

MUNICH, West Germany, April 6 (UPI).—Highly-touted Stan Smith defeated fellow American Bob Lutz, 6-1, 6-1, in 30 minutes to reach the semifinals in the AAA circuit of World Championship Tennis.

Smith, of Sea Pines, S. C., jumped into the offensive from the start; his serves spreading dispair in Lutz.

"For me," said Lutz, of Lancaster, Pa., "Stan is a shock opponent. I make faults which I would never make against any other player."

In the semifinals, Smith will take on John Alexander of Australia, who downed Ove Bengtsson of Sweden, 6-3, 6-4.

The Meat Boycotters

WASHINGTON.—It was the fifth day of our meat boycott and the family was sitting around the dining room table wiping up the gravy from the cheese and turnip casserole that my wife had prepared for us. You could see the pride in the children's faces. They had survived almost a week without meat—and they knew they had struck a great blow for lower food prices.

Buchwald

"I don't even miss meat," my daughter Jennifer said.

"I don't even miss chicken," my daughter Connie agreed.

* * *

My son Joel said, "The voice of the consumer has been heard in the land."

"Then you all agree," I said, "that boycotts are the best way of showing our discontent over high prices."

Everyone agreed.

"The reason I raise the question," I said, "is that the telephone company is thinking of doubling the price of a call from 10 to 20 cents. This would be an increase of 100 percent and I think if they do it we should boycott the telephone system."

The family looked at me as if I had gone mad.

"Boycott the telephone company?" Jennifer said. "But how could I talk to my friends?"

"You could write them letters," I suggested.

* * *

"No one writes anyone letters anymore," Connie said.

"Even if they did," Joel said, "they'd never be delivered."

My wife, who never knows when I'm kidding, said, "Are you serious about boycotting the phone company?"

"Dead serious," I said. "We've got to bring them to their knees. We've got to bring the cost of a telephone call down, down, down."

"I won't do it," Jennifer shouted. "I won't give up the telephone."

"You gave up meat," I said.

"Meat is just food," she shouted. "The telephone is my life."

Connie yelled. "We'd die without the telephone."

* * *

Joel agreed. "Man has to communicate by phone or his ear will wither away."

My wife said, "I'll give up one or the other but I won't give up both meat and the telephone."

"Nevertheless," I said, "if we're going to stick by our principles we will have to boycott the telephone company, just as we will have to boycott the gasoline stations when they raise the price of gas."

"Raise the price of gas?" Joel said. "What am I going to do with my car?"

"Keep it in the garage until the gasoline companies see the error of their ways."

"How do I get to school?" Connie said.

"Take the bus."

"What's a bus?" Connie demanded.

* * *

"Don't be smart," I said. "If we're going to give up meat because they raised the prices on us, we're going to give up the telephone and gasoline, and if they raise electricity we'll give up air-conditioning."

"But we have to have air-conditioning," Jennifer said.

"Look, prices are going up on everything. Why should we just sock it to the farmer? If we really want our voices heard we've got to sock the phone company, the gasoline companies, the power companies and anyone else who thinks they can horse around with our household budget. I say we're either in the boycott business for real or we get out of it altogether. Now what do you say?"

My wife sighed. "I'll order a pork roast from the butcher tomorrow morning."

More British Abortions

LONDON, April 6 (AP).—The number of abortions in Britain rose last year to 159,884—some 33,100 more than in 1971—the government has asserted. The report said that about 108,000 of the recorded abortions last year were performed on British women.

Knighthood Lives

By Irving Marder

NICE (IHT).—With the horror quotient of modern warfare rising steadily, many an eye, recoiling from newspaper page or TV screen, grows misty at the thought of the good old days—the golden age of knightly combat, say, when the end came not in a sunburst of napalm but in a 12-foot-lance thrust cleanly through the kishkas.

Pre-eminent among those who cater to this nostalgic death-wish is an ex-Folies Bergère chorus boy named Yvan Chiffre. He is also an ex-ballet dancer, but this twinkletoed background is deceptive. Mr. Chiffre, a Parisian of 37, is a movie stuntman who has appeared in 152 films, a Black Belt judoka, and a Master-at-Arms. The latter title means that he's a whiz with the basic weapon of Gallic chivalry, the slim but lethal epée. As for the other component of chivalry, the horse, Mr. Chiffre's attitude seems to remain, in view of his six years in the saddle, a trifle ambiguous.

"I always thought horses were stupid," he remarked the other day to a visitor at the exposition hall here where an international show-jumping competition was in progress. (His act is the nightcap.) "I'm getting more fond of them, though. My horses are from Portugal, bred for the bullring. They're lively, you know, and some are pretty smart. I was riding one the other day, in fact, that did what I told him to do." It was clear that he still regards this as astonishing.

A tall, handsome, swarthily bearded man of heroic stature, Yvan Chiffre is the organizing and guiding force behind a troupe of about 60 persons—riders, actors, costumers, saddlers, armorers—that has been re-creating France's stirring medieval past, two nights a week during the April-September season, by staging authentic jousting contests, tableaux, and even mini-dramas. But he and Les Chevaliers have been charging uphill all the way.

"The French are not terribly interested in their past," said Mr. Chiffre, addressing his half-empty beer glass. Once his spectacles get going, it is possible, evidently, to retain their interest, but there is a characteristic "so-what" attitude that first must be overcome. His own riders, he said, shared this feeling: "They felt, when we began, that the stuff about knighthood was a joke." Then they got hooked? Well, up to a point. Mr. Chiffre, whose English is fluent, resorted to gestures to convey the idea that his tigers did not go around declaiming oaths involving fealty to the Holy Grail.

They, like the head Chevalier, are all professional stuntmen. In season they play the medieval-tournament circuit Saturdays and Sundays and then fly back to Paris to fall off cliffs, crash racing cars and jump from blazing planes in front of movie or TV cameras. Mr. Chiffre has been at it for 12 years, after leaving the Sorbonne one year short of a degree, and doing a three-year army hitch in Algeria.

His father, a Paris police official, wanted him to go into the hotel business. But Yvan had always been "crazy about show business," and his father agreed to give him a one-year shot at it. He studied dancing, worked at the Folies for a few months, toured with an American-style ballet company ("like 'West Side Story'") and then managed to break into movie stunt work. There was, he says, some reluctance among his colleagues to see a new and hungry aspirant enter their ranks. "They called me 'The Dancer,'" he said with a grin, "and cut the cinches on my saddles so that I would fall on my head."

But he hung on grimly, nevertheless, and before long was getting speaking roles in films including such big-budget opuses as "The Longest Day," in which he parachuted into Sainte-Mère-Eglise on D-day, and with the Grand Old Man of French cloak-and-dagger films, Jean Marais. Thus he had made a considerable name for himself as a swashbuckling type when one day the town of Saint-Etienne, not far from Paris, asked if he would be interested in putting on "a Wild West show," to help draw tourists. "I said no—I didn't think much of the cowboys-and-Indians idea. But I'd noticed that the town has a splendid castle on a hill. And so I said how about a medieval spectacle, with knights in armor and stuff like that?"

Only then did he discover what he had let himself in for. It involved six months of research and preparation, with half a dozen of his friends and colleagues from the film sets, and an initial outlay of 20,000 francs—about $4,000 then—for costumes and equipment. The others, one by one, said reluctantly that they couldn't afford to chip in, which left him holding the bag. "So," he said, "I had to do some more dangerous stunt work, in order to make more money. But we did it, and the first show drew 7,000 people at 10 francs a head. We had expected maybe a thousand."

His Chevaliers wear armor that is made of tough plastic, rather than iron, with chain-mail fittings. It is lined at pressure points with sponge rubber (something the knights of old never thought of), but otherwise their equipment and weapons are as authentic as scholarly research can make them. The battle-axes are especially formidable, and so are the two-handed broadswords, which weigh from 30 to 40 pounds—a considerable burden when swung at arm's length.

Mr. Chiffre himself no longer takes part in knightly combat, limiting his on-stage role to a canter around the arena to introduce the hostilities. "I'm getting tired of falling off horses and things like that," he said, "after 12 years of it." He hopes to become a film director, and he has a vehicle in mind.

But the jousting business—is it as hazardous as it looks?

He shook his head vigorously. "No, not really. They take some hard knocks, of course. But I tell my boys that if they do exactly as I've taught them, they will not get hurt. Last night, for example, one of them did not do as I told him. He was jousting on horseback, and he had left the visor of his helmet up."

What happened?

Mr. Chiffre rubbed his chin. "Well, it was not very good. The lance hit his shield, glanced off, and took him just here"—he touched the underside of his jaw. "It went through—made a hole. He is in the hospital here; he'll be all right . . . He cried, you know. Not because he was hurt, but because he knew he had made a mistake."

PEOPLE: Bunuel on Hollywood—'Glorious to Be There'

Film director Luis Buñuel has denied reports that he said winning an Oscar meant "absolutely nothing" to him and that he "wouldn't go to Hollywood for anything."

Buñuel, 73, called the report, first published in the Spanish newspaper Pueblo, "awful twisting of facts." He said his only comment to the Madrid newsman who told him he had won the Oscar for the best foreign-language film was, "At my age I don't care about prizes."

Buñuel said he was invited to go to Hollywood for the Oscar award ceremony but he declined saying: "At my age I don't feel strong enough to make such a long trip." "I like Hollywood," said Buñuel. "I have been there three times and I plan another visit shortly. My son Rafael is working there and I hope to see him there soon."

"How the hell could I say I wanted nothing to do with Hollywood if I am a member of the Motion Picture Academy since 1970?" Buñuel said. "Beverly Hills, how lovely that place is. For me it's one of the loveliest places in the world. It's glorious to be there."

Although he was born in Spain, "I have been a Mexican citizen for the last 30 years. I don't know why now they say Buñuel is Spanish." He is in Madrid for medical treatment.

Prince Charles, heir to the British throne, was in Cartagena, Colombia early this week, arriving aboard HMS Minerva on which he is serving as a sub-lieutenant. But he won't be aboard the Minerva when it docks in Bermuda April 15 because, a Royal Navy spokesman said, his presence would put extra strain on security forces there. Authorities said the local police are fully engaged in the investigation of the March 10 murder of Governor Sir Richard Sharples. Prince Charles's presence would divert manpower from the investigation. The prince will transfer to HMS Fox while Minerva is in port, returning to the ship after it leaves Hamilton.

Wallace handed the bracelet to McDow Thursday as he and 12 other former POWs and their families arrived for dinner at the governor's mansion. Aides say the governor has been wearing the bracelet since McDow was shot down over North Vietnam in June, 1972. He chose to wear that bracelet because he is a friend of McDow's father, former state senator J.T. "Jimmy" McDow.

Israel's Premier Golda Meir will write her memoirs for publication in the spring of 1975, a British publishing house says. Some Israelis saw the announcement Thursday as a sign the premier intends to carry out her intention of quitting office this year. Weidenfeld and Nicolson Ltd. said it signed an agreement Wednesday to publish the memoirs in English and Hebrew. It added that G.P. Putnam, Inc. of New York would print the American edition.

DEAR FRIENDS: Are you one of the 1,000 readers who have asked for brochures of NUEVA ANDALUCIA in Marbella on the famous Costa Del Sol of Spain? When are you coming to inspect the garden apartments with swimming pools? The deluxe Spanish village apartments edging the Port for 1,000 yachts? The duplex condominiums above the first tee of our Robert Trent Jones Golf Course? The building sites bordering the Golf? Low-rise and high-class, NUEVA ANDALUCIA is the most beautifully planned resort on the Spanish coast. Don't miss it! Write to let me know when you plan to visit and I will be there to greet you. Let the sunshine in! Hasta pronto!
